Post Election

This is amazing. The Republicans have a 2 to 4 seat majority in the house. 50-50 in the Senate if Gore loses.

The second closest electoral college race in history next to the corrupt bargain of 1876 which FL played the major role.

Gore has a 337,000 vote lead out of 103,850,000 or so.

Electoral Vote Current Estimate Bush 271 Gore 267. Needs 270 to win.

If Bush Wins. He will be the 43rd President. Grover Cleveland counts twice. This chart doesn't count Bush yet.

17 Republican Presidents. 14 Democratic Presidents. 4 Whigs. 4 Democratic-Republicans (Jefferson to John Quincy Adams)

2 Federalists (Washington and Adams). 1 Unionist (Andrew Johnson)

80 Years Republican. 80 Years Democratic. 28 Years Democratic-Republican. 12 Years Federalists. 8 Years Whigs. 4 Years Unionist.

SPOTLIGHT

Over And Under

In debating the FL machine-ballot results, keep in mind the two main reasons a machine might reject a ballot: (#2)

- -- Undervoting: Machines reject ballots where voters haven't made clear holes, even if they tried. A hand count would probably produce many ballots where the intent was clear if the hole was not -- which could be just as true in Bush counties as in the 4 counties where Gore has asked for a hand count.
- -- Overvoting: Two-thirds of the rejected Palm Beach ballots were from over-voters. Those who mistakenly voted for Buchanan and Gore might have a weak case for redress if they failed to ask for another ballot. But there is a different explanation: Some may have voted twice, once for Al Gore and once for Joe Lieberman, on a ballot that lists both names, seems to provide a place to vote for each, and nowhere says to vote only for one.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"We're now living in a nation where after voters cast ballots, somebody needs to ask them: 'Is that your final answer."

-- Los Angeles Times' Mike Downey, 11/10

INDECISION 2000

↑ FLORIDA: Waiting To Exhale

As reported by the AP, the latest recount numbers with 67 out 67 precincts reporting has George W. Bush ahead by 327 votes (AP, 11/10). The 327-vote gap "showed a much closer race" than the results released yesterday by FL Sec./State Katherine Harris. Harris "moved cautiously" yesterday, releasing figures from 53 counties where recount totals were certified by county officials. Harris announced the margin at 1,784 -- the exact margin Bush had before the recount, which Harris aide Ben McKay called "completely coincidental." Harris noted that counties must have their recounts in by 11/14 and that while absentee ballots must be received by 11/17, they must also be postmarked by Election Day (Bousquet and Clark, Miami Herald, 11/10). Harris: "Hear this: We will continue to perform our responsibilities and this process with all due speed, but with a determination to assure the full accuracy and independence of this process" (Lauer, Tallahassee Democrat, 11/10). In addition, Harris announced that FL Agriculture Commis. Bob Crawford will replace FL GOP Gov. Jeb Bush on the canvassing board that will eventually certify the state's recount results (Kam, AP/Naples Daily News, 11/10).

Crawford, on whether the AP tally is incorrect: "I don't know if it's incorrect or not. I do know that at 54 counties late last night, we had George Bush up by 1784 votes. Now that didn't seem to be tracking the AP projection. So there is a little bit of a discrepancy there but we have some more counties to count and it may end up being the same by the end of the day" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

Focus Shifts To Overseas Ballots

After the AP report indicted that Bush held onto the lead after all 67 precincts had reported, Bush spokesperson Karen Hughes released a statement maintaining, "Th vote count on Thursday night showed Governor Bush won Florida's election, and a recount has now confirmed his victory. The only votes left to be counted are the overseas ballots, which in the past have favored Republican candidates. ... We hope Vice President Al Gore and his campaign will reconsider their threats of lawsuits or still more recounts, which could undermine the constitutional process of selecting a President and has no foreseeable end" (11/10). FL law "allows votes cast overseas to be counted as long as they arrive within 10 days of the election, which is Nov. 17. But those that arrive after Election Day aren't opened and counted until that deadline arrives" (Davis and Jaffe. Wall Street Journal. 11/10).

Palm Beach Post's Van Sickleref reports that "more than 7,000" absentee votes from FL residents overseas still had not yet been counted yesterday, "making them a possible final swing vote in a razor thin race for president." The Palm Beach Post "checked with elections officials in 52 counties" yesterday and "found that at least 7,479 votes still were not counted out of the 15,230 absentee votes issued overseas from those offices." However, the 7,479 number "does not include large counties like Broward and Pinellas, or counties like St. Johns that are home to large pockets of Navy personnel, the type of profession that would most likely station people overseas." The number of outstanding ballots for these 15 counties was not yet available late yesterday (11/10).

A survey conducted by the Miami Herald of 17 counties indicated that 2,975 overseas ballots had not yet been returned (Bousquet and Clark. Miami Herald, 11/10).

USA Today's Leinwand writes that "about 5,000 overseas ballots are outstanding, according to estimates." However, "no one can predict how many of those will be returned" (11/10).

A Sampling Of What May Be Out There

Duval County: Has had "less than 60% of its overseas ballots come in." However, Supervisor of Elections John Stafford maintained that is "about normal" (Van Sickleref, Palm Beach Post, 11/10).

Bay County: It may be a "small" county in the Panhandle, but the Air Force and Navy employ "about 10,000 people there, which might account for their 650 ballots issued overseas." The county still has about 306 overseas ballots outstanding. Deputy Supervisor of Elections Larry Roxby: "There's no way to tell how many overseas ballots are to come in. ... I wouldn't be surprised if we saw a lot, but in the last few days we haven't seen any" (Van Sickleref, Palm Beach Post, 11/10).

Brevard County: 1,379 ballots were sent from the county and "only 23.6% haven't been accounted for." Supervisor of Elections Fred Galey maintained that he "expects about 65 of the remaining 325 to come in based on the history of absentee voting from overseas in that county" (Van Sickleref, Palm Beach Post, 11/10)

Salon.com's Chocano writes civilian DoD employee Elaine Gatley has said that "at least five" FL residents serving at a US Air Force Base in England received two absentee ballots for this year's presidential race. Gatley said yesterday that she "and four fellow Floridians who work in her office received two ballots in the mail from the state of Florida." Gatley, a registered Dem, "completed and returned only one of the ballots," but she added that her friends, who are registered GOPers, "told her that they filled out and returned the second ballots as well." Gatley: "These people though there was something wrong with the original ballot. ... They just sent the second ballot in, thinking maybe something was wrong." However, according to a FL elections official, if someone sends in two ballots, election officials "simply void one of them, not both" (11/9).

FL elections board's Bob Crawford on DoD employees in England getting two absentee ballots each: "As those ballots come back to the individual supervisors of the election, there's going to be some ability to make sure people don't vote twice and we'll be watching that very closely" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

Who Will Overseas Ballots Help?

"Many say military votes would tend to favor" Bush. In addition, "many of the supervisors say their absentee votes from overseas are two-to-one Republican." Regardless, "whatever they are, many supervisors say they won't touch the votes" until 11/17. Clay Co. deputy supervisor Stephanie Thomas: "Right now I have 195 in the vault. ... They came in after Nov. 7, so we don't touch them. But they do tend to be military" (Van Sickleref, Palm Beach Post, 11/10).

"Many" of the American voters in Israel are retirees "who use regular postal service, which can take a week to reach" the U.S. That "would make them more likely to arrive in Florida after" the 11/17 deadline. In addition, Republicans Abroad dir. Michael Jones "scoffs that Americans in Israel will play a significant role." He maintained that "many Americans overseas are business executives" who "tend to vote Republican." However, a spokesperson for the Assoc. of Americans and Canadians in Israel "estimates that 4,000 of the group's members registered to vote in Florida." Of that number, the spokesperson estimated that 90% of them voted for Gore. Of the 120,000 Americans who live in Israel, about 2/3 of them belong to the AACI (Davis and Jaffe. Wall Street Journal, 11/10).

The "tight" race in FL "may give the last word" on the presidential election to a "relative handful of overseas voters who are eclectic, often conservative -- and usually an electoral afterthought" (Richter and Pasternak, Los Angeles Times, 11/10).

Chicago Tribune's Dellios writes that "like Jewish voters elsewhere, 90% of Israeli Floridians were expected" to vote for Gore. The "idea that they could swing the election is a bit far-fetched, but perhaps no more so than other scenarios that have become a reality in the US since Election Day" (11/10).

Is Gore Camp Ready To Sue?

Dems yesterday "vowed legal action" yesterday to determine and Gore campaign chair William Daley said he and Gore advisor, ex-Sec./State Warren Christopher, were "deeply troubled" by the fairness of the election -- "particularly problems resulting from the ballot" in Palm Beach Co. Daley said that Dem officials would "request a hand count of ballots" in Palm Beach Co., as well as Broward, Volusia and Dade. Dem atty Kendall Coffey said he "didn't know whether demanding a new election" in Palm Beach Co. would be the "appropriate legal remedy, adding that a judge "might have different options" (Cobb, Houston Chronicle, 11/10).

The Gore campaign "vowed" yesterday to "mount a legal challenge" of the FL vote. The decision "means a transfixed nation might have to wait weeks to learn" who will become president. Gore's "determination to contest one of the closest White House races in history added another twist to a gripping political drama." It was "a moment no one had anticipated -- and one that put to the test the nation's long democratic tradition of a smooth transfer of power" (11/10).

USA Today's Keen writes that Bush has been "saving for months" that Gore would "do anything to get elected," now they are "trying to convince the nation that's why Gore appears determined to challenge -- in court if necessary -- the vote count in Florida." Bush chair Don Evans: "Vice President Gore's campaign did not like the outcome of Election Day, and it seems they're worried that they won't like the official recount results either" (11/10). ABC's Stephanopoulos, on contention beyond FL: "If the result in Florida flips, there are three states where the Republicans are very close to Gore. ... There is a potential if this is prolonged in Florida that it could go on to other states" ("World News," 11/9).

Pressure Mounting Against Court Challenge?

Washington Post's Lane writes that no presidential election in US history has been decided by federal or state court action, "so if they choose to go to court to reverse the apparent result" of the FL election, Gore "and his supporters would be venturing into uncharted waters" (11/10). Daley "accused" the Bush campaign of trying to "presumptively crown themselves the victors" by planning a transition team. Daley, "fearful that Bush and his strategists were winning the public relations battle by painting Gore as a sore loser," maintained: "We do not want delay, What we do want, however, is democracy fulfilled."

Two Dem senators raised concerns about a possible court challenge yesterday. LA Dem Sen. John Breaux maintained that the right thing to do "is to count the votes and respect the decision." NJ Dem Sen. Bob Torricelli "warned against getting mired in the courts": "I want Al Gore to win this election ... but more than that, I want somebody to win this election. There is going to have to be a very compelling case for anybody to take this to a court of law." More Torricelli: "It's a downward spiral. It may begin with Florida. but it can go to other states and ultimately the presidency of the United States should not be decided by a judge" (Apple, New York Times, 11/10).

CNN's Schneider: "Today what we saw was a dangerous escalation of the rhetoric, a sense that people are trying to make politics out of what should be an orderly vote-counting process. Threats of legal suits, recriminations, vote fraud, voter confusion. I think that is very dismaying to voters who want to see a process that is, in the very least, orderly" ("Election 2000," 11/9).

"Step by incredible step, the overtime struggle" for the presidency is "inching toward the constitutional confrontation both sides declare they do not want." However, "stopping short of one will become increasingly difficult should the struggle go to court as Democrats intend" (Mears, AP, 11/9).

St. Petersburg Times' Pittman writes that "for the most part" legal experts "were scratching around in vain to find a legal precedent that applies to this particular situation" (11/10).

NBC's Lauer on the legal challenges in Palm Beach county: "Legal challenges could keep the race's outcome in doubt long after all the votes have been counted and recounted again" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

Washington Times' Tony Blankley, on vote contention being a slippery slope: "As each [vote] gets contested the next one will. ... This can not be contained once it starts, it is a very dangerous moment" ("Rivera Live." CNBC, 11/9).

Election law specialist Kenneth Gross on where this could end up: "It will go, I'm sure, to the Florida Supreme Court. It is possible that it could go from there to the U.S. Supreme Court if there is a federal question" ("Early Show," CBS, 11/10).

In "turning to the courts to help resolve" the election, Gore's campaign has "stepped onto unexplored -and some say, dangerous -- constitutional territory, legal and constitutional experts" said yesterday (Hight, Cox News/Palm Beach Post, 11/10).

Constitutional lawyer Floyd Abrams: "I don't think that presidential candidates ought lightly to go to court, because it does have the potential for not only slowing things down, but for delegitimizing the system. Here I think it's the opposite. I think in this case you almost need a judge to say, look, this was basically fair. Sure, some people got taken advantage of. That's life" ("LKL," CNN, 11/9).

NBC's Abrams, on the votes being contested in court: "What is more political than this? How can you not look at the political affiliation -- look into the political background of each and every judge. ... In this particular case, it is almost if you have ever voted in an election you would have to recuse yourself" ("Rivera Live," CNBC, 11/9).

The Daley News

Gore Chair Bill Daley's 11/10 suggestion of voting irregularities in FL "seemed an ironic twist on a family legacy." Daley's late father Richard Daley, ex-Chicago mayor, "was accused of using his worldfamous machine politics to throw the 1960 election" in JFK's fayor. While allegations of voter fraud "were never proven," the "story still lives in Chicago lore." Nixon's '60 press sec. Herb Klein, on Daley's FL remarks: "We felt that his father stole an election and here he is talking about contesting it and we didn't" (Callahan, Wall Street Journal, 11/10). Bill Daley "was learning to play campaign hardball from the time he was seven." He was a "schoolboy" when his father's "political machine delivered crucial muscle" to JFK. And it was "Daley who stepped up to the microphone" 11/9, as "pundits pondered whether Gore would concede the election" if the FL recount favored Bush, Daley: "Technicalities should not determine the president of the United States" (Leeds, Los Angeles Times, 11/10).

The Bush camp "barely waited an hour to start needling the Daley of Campaign 2000 with barely concealed references to the Daley of 40 years ago." Bush strategist Karl Rove: "I really thought it was ironic that Chairman Daley went to great lengths to decry the butterfly ballot as confusing and undemocratic." Rove "waved a butterfly ballot from Cook County" IL and said: "Maybe Mr. Daley is in a better place to decry democracy and confusion in Cook County than he is in Florida, if that's really the case." Daley's friends "insist it was an unfair shot" (Sanger, New York Times, 11/10). The New York Post's Orin writes under the header, "Ironic Twists: Daley's Dad Stole '60 Election" (11/10).

Volusia To Re-Recount By Hand

Following a "contentious canvassing-board meeting about allegations of voting irregularities," Volusia County elections officials agreed 11/9 to "begin a ballot-by-ballot recount of more than 183,000 votes as early as today." The board decided 11/9 "that with so few votes deciding the fate of the presidency, they should leave no doubt and conduct the recount." Dems were "thrilled," but GOPers said the Dems "should accept the results of the recount." Volusia Co. officials "plan to direct dozens of their employees ... to help with the effort today and through the weekend." Ballots "will be separated into stacks of Bush, Gore and others and then counted by hand" (Pedicini, Orlando Sentinel, 11/10).

Pinellas The Tail On The Donkey

Gore "gained a few more precious votes" during a 2nd recount in Pinellas Co. 11/9, but Bush "lawyers and lieutenants maneuvered into the night to try to get them back." After 7 pm in Clearwater, FL, election officials signed the new results giving Gore 417 more votes and Bush 61 fewer than on election night. In the 1st recount 11/8, Gore picked up 404 votes, his "largest single gain" in a 1st recount in the state. Pinellas Co. supervisor, of elections blamed "human error" and said some workers on election night "did not count all the ballots given them" and a worker processed some ballot cards more than once. But Benjamin Ginsberg, Bush camp counsel, said "there is no credible evidence that the tally recorded on election night was inaccurate." Other Bush attys asked the Pinellas office to open today, though it was scheduled to be closed. so the Bush camp could compare absentee ballots and the envelopes in which they were mailed to voter lists. "hunting for any irregularities" (Witt. Washington Post, 11/10).

The Scene In The Sunshine State

ABC's Jennings: "It is a war out there. The presidential campaign only paused for Election Day, and while we are a long way yet from a constitutional crises, the whole nation is now engaged in a debate about the election results" ("World News," 11/9).

CBS' Rather: "The deadlocked Presidential election is still in limbo tonight" ("Evening News." CBS.

NBC's Brokaw: "The Gore campaign set the tone for the day when its heavyweights appeared in Florida to make the legal and political case in unmistakable and uncompromising language: We won't give an inch" ("Nightly News," NBC, 11/9).

More Rather, on the Gore strategy: "News from the Gore camp is that he is prepared to fight for at least another month." CBS' Pitts, on the recount: "Florida election officials had hoped that this would be a simple recount. But tonight it is clear the process has been bogged down by passions and politics" ("Evening News," CBS, 11/9).

CNBC's Rivera: "It is an uncivil war in the state of Florida where emotions are running high as today's recount ... has narrowed between Bush and Gore, dramatically" ("Rivera Live," 11/9).

CNN's Press on what's going on: "This is like impeachment, round two" ("Spin Room," 11/9). National Review's Lowry on the situation: "It's like a horror movie. It's an election that won't die. Every time there's a stake through its heart, it's up again and right at us" ("Spin Room," CNN, 11/9).

Dem strategist James Carville on media reactions to the situation: "Somebody needs to go through some of these TV studios and shoot everybody with a dart tranquilizer. I mean, the country's going to be fine" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

Of Lawsuits, Civil Rights And Fraud

NAACP President Kweisi Mfume on alleged harassment in FL: "Harassment with checkpoints where men, black men and Latinos, were being stopped by state police for no apparent reason near polling places. Harassment where a lot of people who went to vote were told they already voted when in fact they had not, or told that they had voted by absentee when they had not. And they were later proven but in most instances, it took 90 minutes to two hours to get that done and we believe that a lot of people turned around and went home as a result of that" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

Miami Herald's Bousquet on fraud allegations: "The state attorney, the prosecutor's office, is looking into a very, very suspicious set of circumstances. A young man named Todd Vinson, who's a law clerk in Miami, who happens to be the son of a federal judge, asked to have absentee ballots mailed to him. They never got to Miami; they never got to Vinson that is. But they were found by the elections office and Mr. Vinson is saying that his signature was forged. The state attorney's looking into that" ("Early Show," CBS, 11/10).

New York Times' Gonzalez writes, "saying that Florida voters were denied the chance to cast a true vote - either through polling place glitches or a confusing ballot in one county -- the Rev. Jesse Jackson called tonight" for a DoJ investigation "into irregularities in the state's presidential election." Jackson: "Twenty-two thousand people are begging for their vote to count and for its intent to be realized. ... The last vote caused a crisis in the credibility of this election" (11/10).

Palm Beach Post's Crowley writes that as it "got even more incredible" yesterday as Bush's lead narrowed and eight state and federal lawsuits challenging the election were filed (11/10). CBS' Frankel on the lawsuits: "As representatives for both candidates met, lawsuits have been filed, with the suggestion that more will follow" ("Early Show," 11/10).

CBS' Hurley on the lawsuits: "This controversy is spinning into a growing number of lawsuits against this vote. In fact, just yesterday alone, four such suits were filed in state court here; that as demonstrators promise to continue to take their case as well to the streets" ("Early Show," 11/10). (Back to Contents)

PALM BEACH: Fortunes Told In Palm Reading!

Palm Beach County Circuit Judge Kathleen Kroll "seized control" of the county's presidential ballots 11/9, "bringing the courts into an election that has made the county the epicenter of a growing political crisis." Kroll "issued a temporary injunction" preventing county elections canvassing board "from releasing the ballots before a court hearing next week." The injunction was requested by two Boca Raton voters, Beverly Rogers and Ray Kaplan, who "filed a lawsuit saying they" were "cheated out of their right to vote because the county's two-sided ballot was illegally confusing" (Hiaasen/Caputo/Engelhardt, Palm Beach Post, 11/10). Kroll wrote, in response to one of six lawsuits filed in Palm Beach County by voters, that based on the lawsuit filed by two Boca Raton women "it appears they would suffer 'irreparable injury' if the votes are certified before the case can be heard": "To preserve the electoral process in this presidential election and the important voters' rights at stake, there is an immediate need for a resolution in this case" (11/10). Kroll's injunction "prevents state and county officials from certifying as final" the results of the election. The Judges decision said the ballot was confusing and "printed in such a way that Plaintiffs were deprived of their right to freely express their will" (11/10).

"Too Close To Call" enters "Uncharted Territory"

Washington Times' Murray reports, FL case-law "bars state courts from ordering a new election on grounds a ballot was confusing," and fed'l law "could sidetrack any attempt to change that." According to a 1974 District Court of Appeals ruling, the Constitution assumes a voter's "ability to read and his intelligence to indicate his choice with the degree of care commensurate with the solemnity of the occasion" (11/10).

Los Angeles Times Savage reports, FL's Supreme Court "has given judges in the state broad power to overturn an election if flawed ballots create 'reasonable doubt'" that the outcome reflects "the will of the voters." The law "is not clear, however, on how to remedy such a mistake." Univ. of FL's Law School Dean Jon Mills: "We are in uncharted territory" (11/10).

Detroit Free Press' Mondics/Savino report, Gore's campaign "faces high legal hurdles" in court. State and Fed'l Judges, "following years of legal and political tradition, usually have shown themselves extremely reluctant to reverse elections," and do so "only in instances of fraud or extreme irregularities." To "intervene would open a Pandora's box of time-consuming legal assaults," experts said 11/9. Georgetown Law's Susan Low Bloch: "One reason courts don't step in and shouldn't step in is because it would be easy to say, 'My guy didn't win and I'm going to come up with a reason for challenging the election" (11/10).

Newsweek's Fineman: "Any judge is going to be very reluctant to overturn balloting on the national election day for president, having in essence a whole second presidential election in one county. I think that is highly unlikely" ("Hardball," MSNBC, 11/9).

Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel's Collie/Burstein report, this "is largely uncharted territory -- while there are plenty of cases involving contested results, they mostly have involved local elections." Stanford law professor Pamela Karlan: "Trying to predict this is just impossible. .... This is judges making new law. Whatever they do they will be making new law" (11/10). USA Today's Biskupic reports, could Palm Beach County "really get to vote again, with the presidency on the line?" GOP election law expert Jan Baran: "Highly unlikely." Univ. Miami law prof. Terence Anderson: "Unprecedented." William and Mary law prof./Gore advisor Michael Gerhardt: "A complete uphill battle." The consensus is, "the hurdles in seeking a do-over in the presidential voting are enormous. Judges are very reluctant to interfere with the political process and generally tolerate considerable confusion -- even mistakes" (11/10).

NPR's Liasson, on a PBC re-ballot: "There is no way that a re-do or whatever you call it -- another election -- is going to be held in one of the most Democratic counties in Florida. It is just not going to happen" ("Special Report," FNC, 11/9).

FEC Commissioner Bradley Smith, on whether Gore has a case: "Typically, you look at issues of fraud ... or people, usually racial minorities, being intimidated and kept away from the booth. The claims made in Palm Beach seem to have nothing to do with any of those. It's merely the idea that certain voters came out and later made self-serving statements that they were confused. If we are going to start overturning election results because some voters were confused, we could probably never have an election in this country" ("Special Report," FNC, 11/9).

NBC's Williams, on Gore's legal challenges to the PB ballot: "Legal experts say the Gore argument is weakened because no one challenged the ballot before election day" ("Nightly News," NBC, 11/9).

ABC's Judd, on the FL ballot statutes: "It mandates the order in which the candidates names must appear. And mandates that the punch holes must be to the right of those names. ... A recent case in Florida shows just how tough it can be to contest the legitimacy of election results. A candidate for local sheriff claimed fraud in the counting of absentee ballots. The court found there was gross negligence, but that still did not warrant a new election" ("World News," 11/9).

NBC's Abrams, on the Gore challenges and legal precedent: "There is no question it is going to be an uphill battle for the Gore team. ... The [precedent] language generally doesn't help the Gore team. There is some language they can use, but generally, it doesn't help. Those rulings are saying, in essence, you need more than just confusion about the ballot, and you better not come to us after the election is over, and you have lost, and then complain about the way the ballot looked" ("Nightly News," NBC, 11/9).

Atty. Alan Fein, on the Palm Beach ballot: "You can contest an election like this for any cause where the will of the people has been frustrated. ... This ballot was clearly illegal. It is not even a close question. ... [The statute] says the major candidates go first. So, the Democrat and then the Republican go first and then in vertical order after that come all the minor party candidates to avoid this very problem" ("Hardball," MSNBC, 11/9).

CNN's van Susteren: "I don't think that the ballot was a problem. ... What the law says down here is, 'Voting squares may be placed in front of or in back of the names of candidates and statements.' ... I think the better issue is whether or not they were confused and if there were irregularities associated with perhaps the way the ballot was set up" ("Crossfire," 11/9).

Rep. Peter Deutsch (D-FL), to Rep. Joe Scarborough (R-FL): "In 1996, you said, there were 15,000 inaccurate votes in Palm Beach County, and you're saying it's the same as this cycle, or 3,000 votes more -- that's not true. The 19,000 votes that occurred on Tuesday were over-votes. That's where people punch two ballots. The Bush campaign has been spreading this lie since early this afternoon. The 16,000 or the 15,000 number you're talking is both what's called undervotes and overvotes. If you include undervotes and overvotes, there were 30,000 under and over-votes in Palm Beach County on Tuesday, twice what occurred" ("Hannity & Colmes," FNC, 11/9).

More Deutsch, on the legality of the ballot: "What has occurred in Palm Beach County -- there was an illegal ballot. It is 100% certain the ballot was illegal. Under Florida law, the top place on the ballot is the party that got the most votes for governor, the second should be the party that got the second-most. ... The second hole was Pat Buchanan."

Scarborough, on the contention that ballots must be marked to the right of the candidate's name: "That's wrong. That is wrong, because if you read that entire chapter of Florida law, that is for counties that only have written ballots. ... In electronic balloting it says what applies when you have electronic balloting, you can place it before the name or after the name" ("Hannity & Colmes," FNC, 11/9).

Are Some 10,000 PB "Undervotes" actually "Hanging Chads"?

According to the Palm Beach Elections website, 461,988 ballots were cast in the presidential election, but only 432,286 total votes were counted. A total of 29,702 ballots did not count towards the race, of which 19,120 were "overvotes" (pbcelections.org).

Miami-Herald's Finerock/Bolstad report, Gore supporters 11/9 "requested a manual recount of ballots in Miami-Dade, Broward, Palm Beach and Volusia counties" — a move that "could add tens of thousands of votes" to the results. Dems are "pinning their hopes in part on 'hanging chads' — tiny flaps of paper left hanging from the ballot after the vote hole is punched that cause it to be overlooked by an automatic counting machine." Gore's supporters "are particularly focusing on what are called the 'undervotes'" — 6,686 in Broward, 10,750 in Miami-Dade, about 10,000 in Palm Beach. In Palm Beach, elections officials "decided they will recount part of the 461,988 ballots by hand and all the ballots by machine." If "discrepancies occur between the hand count sample and the machine count, the law does not specify what happens next" (11/10).

Palm Beach County has "agreed to manually recount some ballots this weekend to double-check a machine recount." The County canvassing board voted 3-0 for a "new recount" starting at 9 am on 11/11, that "will cover at least 1 percent of the popular vote and three precincts -- or roughly 4,000 ballots." Dems "will choose the precincts," and GOPers can ask for another 4K votes to be recounted. If "discrepancies surface between the electronic recount and the hand recount, canvassers aren't sure what to do next (11/10).

Washington Post's Keating reports, the manual recount "is a laborious process in which election officials wearing rubber gloves plow through stacks of computer cards." One election official holds up "each punch-card ballot to the three members of the local canvassing board." Each member "scans the ballot, and the three" decide how the "voter voted in that race." The standard "for counting a ballot is whether the voter's intent can be discerned. The presence of many pokes, scratches, scrapes, half-punched holes or other markings may be interpreted by officials as indicating a different intent" (11/10).

Rep. Joe Scarborough (R-FL), on allegations of voter irregularities: "Now we're hearing this 19,000 vote deal. It sounds awful until you find out that just as many people voted wrong in Palm Beach County in 1996."

Rep. Peter Deutsch (D-FL), interrupts: "That's just wrong, Joe. You want to bet your career on that, you're going to have a problem?"

Scarborough: "See, that's the great thing. People like Pete Deutsch don't like facts. They like to make political charges. They don't want to hear the fat that in Palm Beach County, in 1996, there were over 15,000 people that cast their votes improperly, they were thrown out. Four years later ... it's about 3 or 4,000 votes more, but it's a bigger turnout."

FNC's Hannity, to Deutsch: "I understand you don't like the results on election day, and you don't like the way the recount is coming out, ... What bothers me is the way Al Gore has unleashed the most partisan people in the country ... to go out there and purposely distort issues. ... Whipping people's minds into a frenzy is irresponsible."

Deutsch: "Let me respond [with] specifics, okay? What you just said and what [Scarborough] just said is a flat out lie, alright, and a distortion. He said that --"

Scarborough: "Oh, so you're calling me a liar?"

Deutsch: "Well, Joe, you are. You're distorting the truth."

Scarborough: "Okay, you just called me a liar again. ... I didn't call you a liar. Call me a liar again, Peter. Is that what this has come to? That's sad."

Deutsch: "Joe, I listened to you for 5 minutes -- Joe, can you listen to me! Joe, can you listen to me? ... Joe, you're not letting me talk!"

Scarborough: "Don't yell, okay? You need to relax. Just don't call me a liar. Let's not make this personal" ("Hannity & Colmes." FNC, 11/9).

Milking It?

Miani Herald's Silva reports, the DNC "is planning a fundraising drive for a massive legal battle" in court for new elections in Palm Beach County. The drive "would be organized by the party," and not Gore's campaign, thus allowing Dems "to raise unlimited amounts of money without running afoul" of FEC laws. A lawsuit "may come as early as next week, filed by aggrieved voters, with party backing." DNC's spokesperson Jenny Backus: "Our bottom-line concern is to make sure the will of the people is upheld" (11/10). Wall Street Journal's Hamburger reports, "close advisers to Al Gore are already soliciting funds from deep-pocket" Dem supporters, and have set up a "recount committee" that can "accept unlimited contributions from individuals and isn't subject to any disclosure requirements." Gore campaign com. dir. Mark Fabiani: "We are seeking a total of $3 million to pay for legal costs, staff salaries and office expenses." Fabiani said the effort "is being aided by Silicon Valley venture capitalist John Doerr, who is helping raise money for the" cmte (11/10).

Pundit Confusion Sets In As Voter Confusion Explained

New York Times' Fessenden reports, the "ballot design at the heart" of election results "is seldom used because it can easily confuse voters, industry officials and experts said today." Granite Creek Tech's Bob Naegele: "To the best of my knowledge, it's been done, but not often. ... It's not a good practice because it can very easily lead to confusion." Democrats "said that the confusion caused by the design was evident from the relatively large number of disqualified votes" in Palm Beach County (11/10). Votes "thrown out" due to over-voting in Palm Beach County: 4.14%. In Broward County, only 1.3% were tossed for overvoting. In addition, Reform candidate Pat Buchanan "received 3,407 votes" in the Dem-leaning county, "more than one in five of all" his FL votes (Smith/Tobin, St. Petersburg Times, 11/10).

Salon's Lantigua reports, according to "a memo distributed to poll workers in Palm Beach County" 11/7, the county elections supervisor Theresa LePore "was already aware that voters were struggling with the confusing butterfly ballot her office had prepared." The memo states "Please remind all voters coming in that they are to vote only for one (1) presidential candidate and that they are to punch the hole next to the arrow next to the number next to the candidate they wish to vote for" (11/10).

FNC's O'Reilly, on Warren Christopher's allegations of irregularities: "Yeah, there are irregularities, Mr. Christopher, and you are one of them. All of these spin-meisters should just shut up until all the votes are counted. Then they can mouth off all they want. The Palm Beach situation, in my opinion, is a disgrace. If some voters got confused, hey, that's life. ... In every election, there are folks who make mistakes. That is simply too bad" ("O'Reilly Factor." FNC. 11/9).

NPR's Liasson, on the Palm Beach ballot: "It's not [confusing]. I don't know what an elderly person would think. Certainly, there was confusion because I don't believe that that many elderly people in that country, knowing the demographics, would knowingly vote for Pat Buchanan. ... It's clear to me which holes the arrows point to" ("Special Report," FNC, 11/9).

FNC's Kondracke, on ballot confusion: "I'm a little old person. I'm walking into the voting booth. I've voted all my life. Florida law says that the box you're supposed to punch is supposed to be on the right side. That's what I'm used to. I might get confused. ... The question is ... whether this ballot violates Florida law" ("Special Report," FNC, 11/9).

Ex-Sen. Bob Dole (R-KS), on voter confusion: "If they want to start looking for confusion and people who can't remember who they voted for, they can go to Cook County, Illinois. ... If we are going to start trying to correct every precinct in America, this election will never end" ("O'Reilly Factor," FNC, 11/9).

Sen. Connie Mack (R-FL): "To imply that people who have failed to follow the rules and the laws of the state with respect to the way they cast their votes that somehow they've been disenfranchised ... is a distortion and politicization of the process" ("Mitchell Report." MSNBC, 11/9).

MSNBC's Begala: "Look at Florida; most of the people who voted on Tuesday were voting for Al Gore.

Now, there are 19,000 people in Palm Beach County whose ballots were thrown out because they were illegally designed. Not the voters fault, it is the fault of the government. George W. Bush says that he trusts people. Why don't we trust people and count their votes and let the chips fall where they may?" (MSNBC, 11/9)

FNC's Kondracke: "I think the remedy, probably, would have to be second vote in Palm Beach County. That is an extreme step. That is clearly what the Gore people are headed for" ("Special Report," FNC, 11/9).

FNC's Barnes, on the move for a statewide re-ballot: "Why should Bush agree to that if he has already won the state? ... If it winds up with the recount that Gore is ahead, do you really think he'd agree to that? Of course not" ("Special Report," FNC, 11/9).

ex-Federal Election Commission Kenneth Gross, on a revote: "I think that there has been improper voting in this county. There is almost no way that a reasonable person can not come to that conclusion, based on the aberration of votes. The problem here is that the only way I can see to rehabilitate the vote is to order a reelection. ... It would be an extraordinary action and a tremendous hurdle for the Democrats to overcome. ... This is a matter of state court" ("Rivera Live," CNBC, 11/9).

Rev. Jesse Jackson: "We are going to keep taking these leaves off of these Bushes until we figure out what is happening. All we want is a fair election" ("Rivera Live," CNBC, 11/9).

Ex-Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-GA): "I am a little surprised that the Gore camp is talking about things that can't possibly happen. We are not going to have a new election in Palm Beach. ... The fact that a voter went in and voted wrong is the voter's obligation" ("The Edge," FNC, 11/9).

State Sen. Jim Sebesta (R-FL): "Folks who vote for two people in one race, surely they must understand what they're doing. ... Somewhere in this individual responsibility has to enter into it. But even if you did vote for two people in one race, there is a mechanism under Florida statues which allows a voter to raise his hand and say, 'Whoops, I goofed, I want another ballot.' And people just did not do that. They didn't do it in Palm Beach County, they didn't do it anywhere" ("NewsHour," PBS, 11/9).

CNN's Matalin: "Just because your ballot's invalidated doesn't mean you're unvoted. I talked to a poll-watcher -- apparently one that CNN or MSNBC can't find; all they can find are Jesse's rent-a-rioters -- but I talked to one yesterday who, all day long, had three confused people who said 'I think I screwed up my ballot.' She gave them a new ballot, marks their first ballot 'invalid,' it goes into the 'invalid' pile. That doesn't mean they didn't vote; they went back and voted. This is just ... crap, and I can't believe the press is just going with it" ("Imus," MSNBC, 11/10).

I'm Gonna Buke

Bay Buchanan 11/9 called it "ridiculous" for George W. Bush's campaign aides to call Palm Beach County "a Buchanan stronghold." B. Buchanan: "We do not believe they are all ours. ... We think there was clear confusion and we understand the confusion since we've looked at the ballot ourselves." Pat Buchanan also "sided with the Democratic Party's interpretation of the 3,407 votes that he received in Palm Beach County" (Garvey. Los Angeles Times. 11/10).

CNN's King, Pat Buchanan: "You got 3,407 votes in Palm Beach County. You didn't campaign there, or spend money there. What do you make of it?"

Buchanan: "Well, certainly I think we got some votes in Palm Beach County, but I don't doubt that a number of those votes cast for me probably were intended for Vice President Gore. ... Those ballots were cast for me. My name was the one they registered. I think those votes have to go to me and I don't see how you can take that back" ("LKL," CNN, 11/9).

USA Today's Tom Squitieri: "The Bush campaign put out today that there is a whole mess of registered voters for the Reform Party in that county. It is just not the case. There is only 226 registered members of the Reform Party in Palm Beach County. ... The Reform Party for congress candidate in that district -- he denounced Buchanan and campaigned for George W. Bush" ("Rivera Live," CNBC, 11/9).

MSNBC's Lawrence O'Donnell, on the Palm Beach voters: "Some Holocaust survivors ... in their worst possible ballot box nightmare, may have ended up casting a vote, not for Al Gore, but for Pat Buchanan" (MSNBC, 11/9).

I Think Thee Doth Protest Too Much

GOP voters "took their concern to the streets Thursday. Waving hand-lettered signs supporting Bush and denouncing calls to vote again," they gathered amist Gore supporters (Barton, Palm Beach Post, 11/10). At noon Thursday, Palm Beach police shut down a part of Olive Ave. as "hundreds swarmed into the street outside the count elections supervisor's office to ask for another chance to vote." Jesse Jackson "crisscrossed the county, appearing at rallies" where he called "for a coalition of Jews and blacks" to challenge the election (Caputo/Cooper, Palm Beach Post, 11/10). Jackson "promised a major South Florida rally Monday that would demand a fair and accurate recount" (Manuel, Atlanta Journal-Constitution, 11/10).

Olive Street is "usually" a "quiet thoroughfare that cuts through downtown." But on one side of the road were Gore supporters, who carried signs like "Bush is too dumb to be president," and on the other were Bush supporters, who carried sings like "I wasn't confused" (Filkins, New York Times, 11/10). It "was no typical protest mob" as many of the protesters "were elderly, walking with canes, sitting in wheelchairs and hovered over by health care attendants as they chanted 'Gore Got More' and 'Revote Now'" (Pressley, Washington Post, 11/10). The "scene was tense" as Gore supporters blocked traffic and exchanged "insults with a small contingent" of Bush backers (Ornstein, Dallas Morning News, 11/10).

NBC's Faw, on Palm Beach protests: "The question here is not how much noise disgruntled voters can make. It's how far their demands for a re-vote will be taken" ("Nightly News," NBC, 11/9).

Theresa "Two-Punch" LaPore

Palm Beach county supervisor of elections Theresa LePore (D) "is at the center of a firestorm" unimaginable just days ago. LePore "is named in several lawsuits" that say her ballot design "led voters to vote for" Reform candidate Pat Buchanan. Members of LePore's own party "are now clamoring about an illegal ballot." But all she "wanted to do" was design "a ballot that the county's numerous senior citizens would find easier to read." So she designed a "butterfly" ballot with larger type. LePore: "Hindsight is 20-20. ... But I'll never do it again." LePore "is taking the position that the ballot was legal," according to her atty Bob Montgomery. She concedes it was confusing, but Montgomery said the "confusion didn't rise to the level of noncompliance with the law." LePore "declined to be interviewed for this article." One county aide said the Palm Beach native has spent "much of the day in tears." County commissioner Mary McCarty (R): "She's hurt, she's upset. The presidency of the United States is on the line, and all eyes are on Theresa" (McKinnon/Perez, Wall Street Journal, 11/10). Los Angeles Times' Bailey/Rabin report. "For election officials across America, what's happening this week in Florida is a glimpse of their own private nightmares" (11/10)

New York Times' Wayne reports, the Palm Beach controversy "has drawn back the curtain on what election experts have long been saying: that the American voting system is no system at all." Some precincts "vote by computer touch-screen. Others use machines designed in 1892." Still others "use punch cards and 1960's tabulating machines." Ballots size and composition vary from one town to the next, as does voting hours, and resources to conduct elections. UVA's Larry Sabato: "The truth is, a lot of sloppiness has crept into our voting system and it has not mattered before. Now it matters" (11/10). (Back to Contents)

RECOUNT WATCH: The New "Battleground" States

Los Angeles Times' Martelle writes "as things stood late yesterday," George W. Bush had 246 electoral votes and Al Gore had 255, "with Florida, New Mexico and Oregon still up in the air. Under those conditions, whichever candidate wins Florida would surpass the 270 votes needed for victory."

But if Bush won recounts in IA and WI, with 7 and 11 EVs respectively, "then Gore's support would erode to the point where he could win Florida and still lose the White House. His position becomes even more precarious should New Mexico, where vote counting was slowed by a technical glitch, give Bush its five electoral votes."

In OR, "a recount may be required by state law if the margin" is less than one-fifth of 1 percent, "or just under 3,000 votes." With about 80K "more votes to be counted, many in Republican leaning areas, Gore led Bush by about 2100 votes," (11/10).

A "senior GOP operative" "said the Republican National Committee has dispatched aides to examine the possibility of recounts" in IA and WI. Those "warning suggest that the struggle for Florida" may "trigger a cascading series of challenges across the country, all designed to prevent either side from claiming the 270 electoral votes needed to win the White House." The GOPer, on the FL recounts spreading: "Once you start the process, the idea that it is going to stop in a couple of Democratic counties in Florida is ludicrous. It is going to go on everywhere. You are sliding toward a very dangerous situation that is not going to be over in a week or two," (Brownstein/Martelle, Los Angeles Times, 11/10).

Ex-Sen. Bob Dole on whether Bush plans to request recounts in other states: "I don't know. ... We don't want to taint the presidency as a result of all this. I mean, people all over the world are watching this process and if they see it become a political campaign and who can turn out the most demonstrators, and the most placards, and make the most noise, they'll going to take a dim view. And the American people will. The next time we have an election, they'll probably be fewer people voting because we thought the people would decide this, not the lawyers" ("Early Show." CBS, 11/10).

Ex-SoS Warren Christopher, to NBC's Couric, on whether the Bush camp will request vote recounts in other states: "That certainly is their right, Katie, if they feel there's really serious inaccuracies there. If the vote is close, and if they think the vote there might make the difference, of course that's their right to do that. I would hope it isn't done in retaliation" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

California

Los Angeles Times' Tamaki/Rabin write CA officials "estimated" 11/9 "that more than 1 million absentee ballots still wait to be counted" in CA. CA counties have 28 days to "certify their results and turn them over to" Secy/State Bill Jones. CA Undersecretary of State Robert C. Lapsley: "We are pleased to say that California is still in play."

"Yet to be counted" in CA "are an estimated 1,016,246 absentee, provisional or challenged ballots from 44" CA counties. Most are absentee ballots. "That number is expected to grow once an unknown number of similar ballots from 14 additional counties are added to the total."

Jones issued a statement 11/9 "urging the public and the media to hold off on declaring a presidential winner of the national popular vote until the absentee ballots in California and across the nation have been counted." Jones "also appealed" to TV networks to come up with a plan to avoid the "fiasco" on Tuesday's premature calls. Jones: "A mistake was already made on election night because of the media's zeal for ratings; let's not make that mistake again with prognostications of the national popular vote," (11/9).

lowa

"Thousands of special ballots have yet to be counted in Iowa" where Gore won the state by 5069 votes, (Okamoto, Des Moines Register, 11/9). Currently, though "Gore appeared to draw 3,115 votes more than Bush," (Martelle, Los Angeles Times, 11/10). The "special ballots" are cast "by people whose names were not listed at polling sites." IA Sec/State Chet Culver "does not know how many special ballots were cast" but in "Polk County alone, Auditor Michael Mauro said 2,164 special ballots were cast and are being reviewed." Mauro: "I presume a good percentage of this will be accepted."

In a press conference 11/9 Bush campaign chairman Don Evans said, "In the state of Iowa, the margin is now just several thousand votes. And this -- and several ballot boxes from, we think, Republican counties -have yet to be counted. This may fall under the automatic trigger that exists in Iowa law." But Culver and IA Gov. Tom Vilsack (D) "said there is not automatic recount process in Iowa, and no countes with ballots collected but not counted." Culver: "We have no reason to believe that any systemic errors or violations of law have occurred in Iowa. We don't appreciate Karl Rove and the Bush campaign creating doubt about the election process in Iowa for their own political purposes," (Okamoto, Des Moines Register, 11/9).

If Bush does request a recount "he'll have to do it one county at a time," sending individual letter to all 99 counties, and he "might have to post a bond of up to 1,000 for each county," (Lynch, Cedar Rapids Gazette, 11/10).

Gov. Tom Vilsack (R-IA), on whether the Bush camp has asked for a recount: "They don't have to contact us until after the vote has actually been canvassed, which will take place next week. We have a window of opportunity for absentee ballots that were postmarked on or before November 6th to be counted. The canvas will take place Monday and Tuesday of next week, after that there's a three-day window of opportunity for any candidate who was on the ballot or who received votes to request a recount" ("GMA," ABC, 11/10).

New Hampshire

NH Dem exec. dir. Kathleen Sullivan "acknowledged that she contacted the secretary of state there to raise the possibility of a recount" in a state where Bush won by less than 8,000 votes. She labeled the recount request "remote" but said it was nonetheless a possibility, (Brownstein/Martelle, Los Angeles Times, 11/10).

NBC's Couric on New Mexico's voting: "Early this morning, it was announced that 252 ballots are missing in New Mexico, so it's chaos" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

"Bernalillo County election officials announced" early this AM that "they could not complete county vote tabulations after the third consecutive night of counting since Election Day. The lack of a completed vote count in the state's most populous county left New Mexico's presidential vote up in the air." Though cty. officials completed and released the results of the 27K absentee ballots, they "ran into problems" when "they tried to total about 40,000 early voting ballots." Cty. Bd. of election dir. Robert Lucero: "The issue is accuracy. Until everything is accounted for, we are not releasing anything." (Albaquerque Journal, 11/10).

In addition, some 1650 "spoiled" ballots -- "including some that were rejected during Thursday's mechanized counting" -- were being counted by hand. Local officials "misprogrammed election software and failed to catch" an error that led to errors in counting early and absentee ballots on which voters cast "straight-party ticket" ballots, (Sanchez/McKay, Albuquerque Journal, 11/10).

Oregon

An OR recount "seemed all but certain in the tightest presidential race Oregon has seen in years." With Gore leading by 8,485 -- boosted by returns from "two Democratic stronghold" counties -- there are "an estimated 40,000 votes" still to be counted. OR Secy/State Bill Bradbury "predicted the margin would narrow as ballots were tallied from Republican-leaning Jackson County, which still had about 13,465 ballots to count due to computer problems." In OR, a recount is triggered automatically if the margin is less than one-fifth of one percent. Bradbury: "I would say the prospect of a recount is pretty high," (AP, 11/10).

OR's "vote-by-mail" has "contributed to the delay in learning" the state's "final results." OR Elections director Lynn Rosik: "It's not going as quickly as we'd like. Some counties are moving more slowly than we'd like." Possible the biggest reason for the delay may be the process of verifying the ballots before counting them, a process that "occurs before voting" at in-person polling places elsewhere, (Wright, Eugene Register-Guard, 11/10).

Wisconsin

"It turns out Illinoisans -- at least some of them -- can vote early and often." Northbrook resident Alice Cook went online "to obtain an Illinois absentee ballot for her daughter, Alice Kearney, a junior at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. But daughter surprised mom by voting Tuesday in Wisconsin, which allows voting without preregistering just by producing a piece of mail showing a Wisconsin address." Though Kearney didn't vote twice, "She could have," said Cook, (Chicago Tribune, 11/10).

Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel's Chaptman writes, "The presidential recount wildfire that rages in Florida could soon spread north to Wisconsin and Iowa, as George W. Bush's campaign mulls double-checking states where Al Gore scored narrow victories." A decision on WI could come early next week, "as Bush campaign officials consult with Gov. Tommy G. Thompson and assess their chances." The WI "unofficial tally" gave Gore a win by 6099 votes out of 2.6M cast. Bush spokesman Bob Hopkins: "There are no immediate plans for a recount in Wisconsin. Of course, things are being looked at and examined. There was some improper activity in the city of Milwaukee."

Rove, on a WI recount: "I've talked to Governor Thompson's chief of staff this morning. He says he believes that after Tuesday's canvass, this may fall under a standard that requires a recount of offers the opportunity of a recount." WI does not have a threshold for automatic recounts. Thompson, who is now in Europe, said on Weds.: "I'm hoping that the Bush team in Austin would request a recount. It's going to be completely their call." Thompson spokesman Tony Jewell, on 11/9: "The governor is going to wait for the final election tallies to come in from across the state, which likely will be Monday or Tuesday. Once those numbers are in, we will take a look at them and confer with Governor Bush and decide whether to seek a recount." Any recount request "must be made within three days of the state receipt of the final county canvas" giving Bush until "late next week" to make such a request, (11/9).

Gore WI spokesman John Kraus: "It is the will of the people of Wisconsin that Al Gore be the next president. The people of Wisconsin went to the polls, and the result was that Al Gore won and George Bush lost. That's the reality." More Kraus: "The vice president not only won the state of Wisconsin but won the popular vote in the nation. Whatever Republicans are saying today, that can't change what the people of Wisconsin said on Tuesday. They have spoken." But WI GOP ex. dir. Rob Hise said, "The irregularities certainly cause us to think more seriously about a recount. The fact is, we don't know how widespread that activity was, nor do we know how long it was going on." The activity "casts a shadow over the results of the election in Wisconsin." Hise "said phones began ringing off the hook Wednesday morning" at the state GOP with "voters complaining about voting irregularities. So many calls have come in that Republicans set up a hotline to handle them," (11/10).

Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel's Umhoefer reports the reason for late WI reporting on Election night was that "people at a few city of Milwaukee polling places waited hours to register and cast ballots Tuesday when intense turn-out cause jam-ups." "Three polling places" including a Milwaukee "housing project" didn't report "results until after midnight, delaying the final tally of Milwaukee voters until 2:30am."

Though "hard numbers" haven't yet confirmed it, "there was anecdotal evidence that minority voter turnout was higher than in past presidential elections in Milwaukee." An NAACP national voter fund getout-the-vote effort "offered lunch or supper to hundreds of voters at tents set up around the inner city. In conjunction, voters were given rides to the polls, a staple of voter-turnout efforts by both political parties." Bush Milwaukee Cty. chairman Scott Walker "suggested Wednesday that the meals may have crossed the line into a form of election bribery," a suggestion "that left a bad taste in the mouth of some of those who have worked with the NAACP to mobilize inner-city voters." Paula Dorsey, who ran Operation Big Vote in Milwaukee: "People always want to make an issue out of anything that is successful in getting a large number of African-Americans to turn out. If the GOP would have thought of feeding people, they would have done that, too." More Dorsey: "If the Republican Party is truly trying to recruit minorities to their party, they need to be cautious" about making charges, (11/10).

WI GOP Chair Rick Graber: "The candidate has three days after the canvassing is complete. We anticipate that that would be early next week. So a decision would have to be made next week. We have rampant reports of voter irregularities and voter fraud, perhaps, in Milwaukee County and outside of Milwaukee County. ... We received over 600 phone calls yesterday at party headquarters with people with reports of irregularities" ("GMA," ABC, 11/10).

Oh Deer

CO elections officials were surprised to hear Bush adviser Karl Rove's claim that 10,000 votes in northern CO remained to be counted. Kruz Watkins, of the CO Secy/State's office: "As far as we know, no, it's not true. If you added all the deer and antelope out there, maybe you'd get to 10,000. Don't write that down." The Bush campaign, was told by its CO director that the votes remained outstanding, but by day's end acknowledged that the CO votes had been counted," (11/10, Denver Post, 11/10). ## GORE: Private Dem Doubts

Los Angeles Times' McManus and Nelson report that "in public," Dem leaders "have rallied" around Al Gore, "offering support for their pursuit of a recount," but "in private, however, some leading" Dems say "that if the recount doesn't go Gore's way, he should consider conceding the race" to George W. Bush -- "without pursuing lengthy legal appeals." One Dem "who has advised Gore in the past": "At this point, the 'gracious loser' role is not something anyone is the party wants him to do. But at some point, he has to consider whether it makes sense to keep going. He can bow out, have a good life for four years, have a lot of goodwill out there and be the front-runner [for the Democratic presidential nomination] four years from now. He may have to ask himself the question: Is it better to create a president of the United States, or create a constitutional crisis?" Even Dems who "expressed private qualms said they backed Gore's demand for a recount," but if Gore "presses a longshot legal challenge, they said, at least some members of Congress will ask whether it is the wisest course for the party" (11/10). CBS' Roberts, on Gore reax to the recount: "It changes nothing for them. They are pinning their hopes for the presidency on a hand count of those disputed ballots. They believe that if they can win back even a fraction of them, the White House will be theirs" ("Evening News," CBS, 11/9).

ABC's Sawyer, to Daley, on dissention among Dems.: "Senator John Breaux ... said that he's questioning the Gore campaign's wisdom in challenging the Palm Beach result. The right thing, he says, is to 'count the votes, respect the decision, without lengthy litigation.' And Senator Robert Torricelli ... has said, 'I want Al Gore to win the election, but more than that, I want somebody to win the election,' suggesting sooner is really important. Are you feeling that pressure?"

Daley: "No, not really. The fact of the matter is, we all want this to be done sooner rather than later. Our constitution provides an election in November -- or, pardon me, our laws provide an election in November, the Electoral College meets in December, and we have an inauguration in January. So we have a 3-month period in which there is a transition. But of course, we all would like to see this done. We all wish it had been completed Tuesday. I'm sure the 19,000 people in Palm Beach who went in and, because of the setup of the ballot, did not have their votes counted. ... If that had happened, this -- we wouldn't be ... having any discussion about who really won this election" ("GMA," 11/10).

Ex-SoS Warren Christopher on if the official tally shows Bush in the lead, and overseas ballots are coming in for Bush as well, if the Gore camp will bow out gracefully: "We all want this to come to an end as soon as possible. At the same time, we have an obligation to seek a full, fair and complete count."

Christopher, on why the Gore camp wants a four-county handcount: "The four counties that were chosen for the hand counts came about because voters in that county, Democrats in that county, felt there were some anomalous results and things that needed to be looked into."

Christopher, on whether the Gore camp will file a lawsuit in Palm Beach County: "No. We'll be supporting the lawsuits that have been filed, or will be filed by citizens of [Florida] from those counties, from that county" ("Today," NBC, 11/10).

Advice From The Players

Ex-Sen. Bill Bradley (D-NJ) predicted that Gore would be the winner when the last FL ballots are counted. Bradley, who was addressing Guilford College in Greensboro, also said "it wouldn't be wise for a candidate to mount a drawn-out legal challenge once the final votes are counted." Bradley: "If you appear as a sore loser and draw this thing out and out ... you won't have a political future" (Young, Winston-Salem Journal, 11/10). Meanwhile, Sen. Robert Torricelli (D-NJ), speaking at Princeton Univ., said that "the nation should preserve its presidential election system, even though it does not guarantee victory to the candidate with the most votes." Torricelli: "I personal will defend (the Electoral College system) to the end." Torricelli also said "neither side should challenge the outcome" of the FL vote, "describing such a move as a 'potentially troubling situation.'" Torricelli: "This should be decided by counting ballots, and I think there would have to be a very compelling case for anybody to take this into a court of law" (Stern, Trentonian Times, 11/10).

A Bush campaign release noted that "the Democratic Party's chief Senate campaign strategist urged"

Gore "to avoid turning the disputed Florida ballot into a rancorous court battle that could win up harming the U.S. political system" (release, 11/9). Wall Street Journal's Hunt writes that Gore "is likely to face an agonizing decision: having clearly defeated" Bush in the popular vote, but "probably falling critically short in the Electoral College," does he challenge the outcome? His decision depends on "important calculations" he makes about his future." Some Dems are saying even if Gore loses, "his superior showing in the popular vote could make him the leading candidate to run in 2004" (11/9). Ex-Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-GA), on Gore refusing to concede: "I am very surprised. It is the opposite of the approach that Vice President Nixon took in 1960. ... I can't imagine why ... Warren Christopher would be suggesting that we are going to go through a long and difficult process. I don't know who is going to win in Florida when this is over ... but I think that the idea that we are going to go through weeks, months of litigation ... strikes me as very destabilizing for America" ("The Edge," FNC, 11/9).

Why Fight?

Gore "resolve to fight" for FL is "fueled by two beliefs: an attitude that Democrats hold the moral high ground and deep resentment" that Bush has begun planning his transition. Gore was doing his own transition planning with ex-CoS Roy Neel. Aides said Gore is "comforted by his apparent win in the popular vote, believes he deserves to be declared the victor; and isn't inclined to give in until he has made an effort to get" FL's EVs (Kasindorf, USA Today, 11/10). ABC's Hayes, on Gore: "Al Gore in not only unwilling to concede, but his campaign generals today declared war. They are making plans and raising money to fight on the legal front. ... Democrats are aware that there is a point where the American public may become weary of this fight. What they are trying to figure out now is how long they can prolong this battle before it backfires on them" ("World News," 11/9). NBC's Shipman, on the Gore strategy: "It is those 19,000 votes in Palm Beach County that are giving the Gore campaign reason to believe they can fight this hard, even supporting an effort to take it to court. This isn't to make a point, say officials. This is to win the Presidency. ... Meanwhile, he is effectively starting a second campaign for the White House, this one in the court of public opinion."

CNN's King, on the Gore strategy: "The Vice President's ... strategy turned more aggressive on two fronts: a stepped-up legal challenge in Florida and angry criticism of Governor Bush for acting as if he is already the president-elect. ... Talk out of Austin about naming Cabinet members has soured already poor relations between the two camps. The Gore team sees it as a deliberate strategy to steer attention away from the Florida recount, and as an attempt by Republicans to paint the vice president as a sore loser, and to turn public opinion in favor of a quick resolution" ("IP," CNN, 11/9). More King, on Gore calls for a hand recount: "The Gore campaign does not expect this recount to swing into the vice president's favor. That's why they want all that hand-counting in those four big counties" ("IP," CNN, 11/9).

Gore Shuts Down Nashville Operations, Returns To DC

Gore went for a jog Thursday and "spent much of the day with his family and in meetings with campaign aides." Gore, during his run, when asked by a reporter if he won the race: "We're having a great run here. Thank you" (Barfield, Newsday, 11/10). Gore flew back to DC after spending the day "secluded in his Nashville hotel" where his "campaign aides were clearly in combative mode and ready to prolong the uncertainly of Tuesday's election with a series of legal moves" (Cohen, Newark Star-Ledger, 11/10). Gore closed his Nashville campaign headquarters. And "except for the 75 Gore staffers in Florida to keep tabs on the recount, the Gore crusade will be based in Washington." Gore is creating a special crute to "handle matters related to the recount." The "campaign's mood turned from uncertainty to defiance" (Bendavid, Chicago Tribune, 11/10). MSNBC's Reid: "The Gore camp is in the process of morphing into a re-count committee" ("The News," 11/9).

Despite Gore's "isolation, aides insist he's feeling confident" (Morris, New York Post, 11/10). Gore's move back to DC, "along with newly aggressive comments" by top officials, suggests Gore "was ready to settle in for the long haul in fight" for FL. But the move also allows Gore "to maintain some distance from the escalating political battle and any public perception that he is not prepared to abide by the rules of the game" (Seelye, New York Times, 11/10). DNC officials "made plans to keep its large election-year staff in place and begin raising more money to cover the costs" (Connolly, Washington Post, 11/10). Joe Lieberman spent the day at home in Washington with his family "speaking by telephone with aides" (Gerstenzang/La Ganga, Los Angeles Times, 11/10).

Anyone Remember The Little Cuban Boy?

New York Post's Balfour reports that if Bush wins the election, "he may want to fire off a thank-you note to" Elian Gonzalez. "There are indications" that FL's Cuban community, "still steaming" about the administration's handling of Elian, "exacted their revenge at the ballot box." Unofficial results show Gore won Miami by 39K votes, while Clinton won it in '96 with 108K votes (11/10). Elian's Miami relatives said "the lawyer who represented them in their effort to keep" Elian "betrayed them by taking up" Gore's cause in the FL vote count. The Gonzalezes "abruptly canceled a Thursday night ceremony to honor Kendall Coffey and other members of the legal team that donated their time to the failed custody to fight over" Elian. A statement released by Gonzalezes spokesperson Armando Gutierrez called Coffey's new role of assisting Gore "incompressible and indefensible." From the statement: "We now feel betrayed by the action taken by Kendall Coffey. We feel profoundly hurt by the actions of this man." Coffey was at the news conference in FL with Gore chair Bill Daley and ex-Sec/State Warren Christopher (Veiga, AP/Naples Daily News, 11/10).

Back To This Old Question

WH officials "defended Gore's decision to limit President Clinton's campaign activity -- a move that may have cost the Democrats some crucial votes." WH spokesperson Jake Siewert said Clinton agreed with Gore's decision to run independently (Ross, AP/Miami Herald, 11/10).

How's Gore Playing?

Wall Street Journal's Fund: "If judges can be trusted to determine the will of the people, why have elections in the first place?" (11/10).

Wall Street Journal editorial: If the election results don't give Gore a victory, "the Gore campaign will try to find a judge to do it instead. In your ordinary banana republic, this would be recognized as a Gore coup d'etat. ... At no point has the Gore campaign suggested that voter fraud has cost them votes. Were that the case, we would be in wholehearted support of their complaint" (11/10).

New York Post editorial: Gore and Daley "may deserve the benefit of the doubt in the Florida ballot recount. What they don't deserve is another election" (11/10).

Chicago Sun-Times' Neal: "If Gore loses, there will be finger pointing, but Daley deserves credit for making the hard decisions. Like Clark Clifford in Harry Truman's 1948 comeback and James A. Backer III in Gerald R. Ford's 1976 comeback, Daley took a faltering campaign and put it back on track" (11/10).

Ex-Sen. Bob Dole (R-KS): "It's always good to hear from Bill Daley, from Chicago, where even the dead vote on a regular basis for Democrats, and where Gore carried Chicago 9 to 1. Maybe we ought to take a look at Chicago" ("GMA," 11/10). More Dole: "I think it's time for Al Gore to saddle up and sort of ride off into the sunset, and say, you know, 'I'm an honorable man, we don't want to start another political campaign ... the election is over, I abide by the recount. Let's get on with the business" ("GMA," 11/10). Dole, on moving on: "We've had a fair election, but let's not make another political campaign out of this and start setting up campaign headquarters and see who can turn out the most demonstrators and get the most press attention" ("Today," NBC, 11/10). (Back to Contents)

BUSH: We Now Go Back To This Transition Already In Progress

Houston Chronicle's Ratcliffe and Reinert report that "the presidential election may remain uncertain," but George W. Bush "is not." Bush "starting organizing a new national government that would take office if he is sworn in as president Jan. 20" (11/10). The "Bush campaign found itself walking a thin line Thursday, bragging on one hand that Bush would prevail as the election winner, while at the same time playing down his plans for the transition so as not to look presumptuous." Bush campaign chair Don Evans: "We cannot stop and wait until the last ballot struggles in Washington state, or the last ballot struggles in Arizona or Iowa or Wisconsin or Florida. Orderly and necessary steps have to be taken" (Kemper, Chicago Tribune, 11/10). "Privately, Bush aides are incensed over Gore's apparent intention to pursue every conceivable legal challenge to the election results. The problem inside the Bush camp is simple but crucial: How to pressure Gore into conceding without making Bush appear arrogant or presumptuous" (Sisk/DeFrank, New York Daily News, 11/10).

Bush and his aides "channeled their energy into two directions" -- "waging an aggressive public relations war over the legitimacy of the election" and "tentatively plotting" Bush's transition (Bruni/Yardley, New York Times, 11/10), CBS' Whitaker, on the Bush strategy: "This Texas campaign has circled the wagons, ... The Bush campaign wants to be seen as taking the high road. But behind the scenes the Bush camp is playing hardball, threatening to challenge Democrats in Iowa, Wisconsin, New Mexico -- states where they claim voting irregularities helped Gore" ("Evening News," CBS, 11/9).

Bush met with campaign foreign policy adviser Condoleezza Rice and aides, "speaking on condition of anonymity, said they expect Bush" to offer her WH National Security Adviser (Raum, AP/Bergen Record, 11/10). Bush "remained sequestered in the governor's mansion for the third straight tension-filled day." He spent the day in staff meetings (Orr, Newark Star-Ledger, 11/10). He spend the morning with ex-Transportation Sec. Andrew Card, who is likely to be WH CoS (Gullo, AP, 11/10). OH Rep. John Kasich (R) is "under consideration to be Bush's finance and budget chief." MA Gov. Paul Cellucci (R) is "likely to be considered for a cabinet post or ambassadorship." Potential AGs include: Boston lawyer Richard Willard, OK Gov. Frank Keating and VA Gov. James Gillmore (Macero, Boston Herald, 11/10).

NH Sen. Judd Gregg (R) said "he expects not to be offered a Cabinet position" because NH Gov. Jeanne Shaheen (D) would appoint someone to fill his spot (Bonamici, Manchester Union-Leader, 11/10). The campaign "found itself backtracking from reports that Bush already was filling Cabinet seats" and other WH positions. "Privately aides worried about whether such news would make the campaign appear arrogant, given that the election is still up in the air" (Neal/Allen, Washington Post, 11/10). The campaign portrayed Bush "bush with the affairs of state, including his own," Bush met with LG Rick Perry (R) in the morning, had lunch with Dick Cheney and met with Rice in the afternoon (Gordon, Newsday, 11/10).

Dems Upset Over Bush Transition Plans

Dems said Bush "was moving ahead prematurely." Gore campaign chair Bill Daley: "I believe that their actions to try and put in place a transition runs the risk of dividing the American people and creating a sense of confusion" (Macero, Boston Herald, 11/10). But "top advisers" to Bush "are making no apologies for openly building" a WH staff. Bush spokesperson Karen Hughes: "All responsible campaigns realize you need to do some preliminary planning" (Danis, New York Post, 11/10). CNN's Crowley, on the Bush spin: "This is now, between these two camps, a matter of politics. And from the Bush campaign point of view, it is Al Gore who is trying to seed some confusion out there and to perhaps redo an election that took place on Tuesday evening" ("IP," CNN, 11/9). ABC's Reynolds: "They are clearly worried ... that these arguments about ballot box irregularities have been gaining some traction with the public. So, today ... they went out and denounced the Democrats as being shrill, distorting the political process."

Ex-Sen. Bob Dole (R-KS): "I think that President-elect Bush should act as President-elect Bush, obviously keep the high ground, go ahead and make preparations. If he has won the election, he should move ahead. ... We don't need to send anybody down there to demagogue the issue like Jesse Jackson is" ("O'Reilly Factor," FNC, 11/9).

What's A Transition Team To Do?

The General Services Admin. is ready to hand over the keys to the official transition office, but "the only thing missing is the next president." The agency had spent six months preparing for this and is now on "hold." GSA spokesperson Vicki Reath: "It's like we had a party set but nobody came. We were all ready to go" (Schrader, Los Angeles Times, 11/10).

Does Jeb Have Higher Name ID Now?

The Los Angeles Times' Clary reports that "according to the Bush family plan, brother Jeb should have slipped quietly out of the national spotlight by now" (11/10). Miami Herald's Fiedler, on Jeb Bush's handling of the FL flap: "He's handled this as well as you could expect him to. He has taken himself off of the state canvassing board, saying he would not play a part in that, and I think he has to" ("IP," CNN, 11/9).

Texas Two-Step

If Bush wins the election, his departure will create "opportunities for ambitious members of his own party and maybe even for Democrat insurgents." Perry will fill the TX gov.'s office for the rest of the term -two more years. The TX Senate will elect a new LG from its own ranks (Mason, Houston Chronicle, 11/10). The TX Senate is divided 15Ds and 16Rs (Hughes, Houston Chronicle, 11/10).

HOW'S IT PLAYIN': Carter Calls For Patience, Others For An End

In statements made to the media at the National Press Club yesterday, ex-Pres. Jimmy Carter said: "I haven't been to Florida, I don't know the details of what's happening today, I haven't had a chance to watch the news. What I do realize is that there are no allegations of fraud or deliberate impropriety. But, we face here an unprecedented circumstance in our nation, certainly in the last hundred years, in that the results of an election are uncertain. And the final result of who will be the next President of the United States is dependent on the final outcome of the decision in Florida. This is a time, I think, not for frivolous delays in the process, which I think would be condemned by the American people. And I don't think it's a time for premature concessions, because we don't yet know the facts about what has occurred in Florida. ... I have full confidence in the constitution of the United States and the laws that govern us ... and also in the integrity of the officials in Florida. I also have full confidence in the integrity of both candidates for President. ... Any challenges to the system that it has not accurately represented the vote of the people needs to be decided in the courts, ultimately. We don't yet know what courts will be involved ... but I think it's very important for the American people to realize that it would be a serious mistake to have the final outcome of the election determined without there being a general consensus that the process has been thoroughly pursued. ... My primary message is that the American people should be patient, that there be no premature decisions made, and that the rule of the people of Florida -- and therefore the nation under our Constitutional system -should be accurately honored" (release, 11/9).

A New York Daily News editorial echoes Carter's remarks: "Never in American has patience been more of a virtue. Never has it been more important to proceed with deliberation. Every ballot must be counted and confirmed, every irregularity probed. This election not only will decide who is the next President ... it must uphold Americans' faith in their electoral process. ... What the nation needs now is patience" (10/11).

Post Chastises Gore Camp, Urges Quick End

A Washington Post editorial notes the remarks by Gore chair Bill Daley when he suggested that the election would be "illegitimate" should Bush win: "A Bush victory would mean the White House had been stolen; that was the plain meaning of the remark. It's a poisonous thing to say in these extraordinary and unsettling circumstances, and Mr. Gore makes a huge mistake if he fails promptly to disown it. The country was almost exactly evenly divided in the election. Half is going to be sorely disappointed no matter who finally takes the oath. Some are going to feel cheated as well. The goal of both candidates, even as they pursue their interests in Florida, should be to minimize that likely sour outcome. They owe it to the office to which they aspire, and to their own reputations over time, to conduct themselves such that whoever wins has the best possible chance of being accepted as the rightful occupant of the office. Mr. Daley yesterday, and Mr. Gore by proxy, crossed to the wrong side of that line. ... Both sides need to back off at this stage. They are risking a political war that could spread far beyond Florida, one that would be far harder to stop than to begin. We say yes to counting a little more, but the legal action about which Mr. Daley spoke elliptically should be approached with enormous caution and restraint. ... One of these candidates -- the one behind in the final Florida count -- is going to have to make a political determination. You have to hope that whoever that turns out to be has in mind the country's interests ahead of his own" (11/10).

More Voices

St. Petersburg Times' Troxler: "First: There is no doubt, zero, that some of those votes for Pat Buchanan down in Palm Beach County were intended for Al Gore. Even Buchanan agrees that is true. Second: There is no doubt, zero, that the Palm Beach ballot was confusing. Look at the clear proof: More than 19,000 voters were disqualified because they voted for more than one presidential candidate. Third: You can make a good case that the Palm Beach ballot was illegal in the first place. State law says the candidates must be listed 'in order' of the party's finish in the last governor's race. They weren't, And to all three points, I say: So what? Tough luck. ... Do you know what a touchdown is in football? The answer is not when the football reaches the end zone. The answer is, when the referee raises his arms in the air. No arms in the air -- no touchdown. If the game was so close that you had to blame the referee, then you should scored more points anyway" (11/10).

Gannett's Raasch: "No matter who is certified the winner after a recount in divided Florida, a new season of cynicism undoubtedly is at hand, exactly half the country will think the presidency was stolen by the other guy" (11/10).

Brookings' Stephen Hess: "This isn't a constitutional crisis. We have an election crisis, but as this permeates the air, it becomes very dangerous and something to worry about" (Condon, Copley News, 11/10).

New York Daily News' Nelson: "After 211 years, the American election system has broken down, and it can't be fixed" (11/10).

A USA Today editorial: "If an increasingly cynical public is to trust the outcome of the election, it is imperative that both candidates settle soon on the obvious process for resolving their differences: agree on what the vote was through as many counts as necessary, let the courts resolve whether that vote was legal, and sell that process to the public. Then Bush and Gore must control any of their partisans who would undermine that effort. The same standard should apply to any other state's recounts. That is not only in the nation's interest, it is also in the candidates' self-interest. Neither will be an effective president if a broad swath of the public considers his election illegitimate. Rising above pettiness is, in fact, the essence of presidential behavior -- which at the moment seems in very short supply" (11/10).

Los Angeles Times' Downey: "We're now living in a nation where after voters cast ballots, somebody needs to ask them: 'Is that your final answer?'" (11/10).

New York Post's Peyser: "Enough! The most powerful men representing the most stable government of the earth's greatest nation are behaving like cannibals over a cookie" (11/10).

Here's An Idea -- Better Ballots

A Santa Fe New Mexican editorial: "We think it's time to consider national standards for conducting federal elections -- from composition of ballots through their accurate and timely counting. Setting those standards would raise many constitutional questions -- but now is the time to face up to them" (11/10). (Back to Contents)

SCENARIOS I: Could A Majority Of 513 Electors Win Presidency?

New York Times' Clymer reports, on 12/18, the day that pres. electors are to meet in all 50 state capitals and DC, the result "may produce a political crisis" if FL's 25 EVs "are still in dispute. But the crisis will not be constitutional, scholars say, for the Constitution enables a president to be chosen even if a big state" like FL does not vote. Some have "suggested the election would be thrown" to the House if neither Gore nor Bush gets a majority of the 538 EVs. "But the Constitution requires only that a winning candidate have the votes of 'a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed." If FL's EVs are not "resolved" by 12/18, or if a "legal restraining order bars" Gov. Jeb Bush (R-FL) from "filing a certificate listing" FL's electors, then Gore has "enough votes from other states to reach a majority" of the 513 electors "actually appointed."

Duke Univ. prof. of law Walter Dellinger "said the reason the Constitution only requires the votes" of a majority of those electors "actually appointed to elect a President was that in the earliest days of the Union a state might neglect to appoint electors, and there was no reason for the process to be held hostage by that omission."

Dellinger also notes that the current problem "is a Florida problem." If the president "were elected by a direct popular vote like all other federal officials, he said, a national recount would be required in an election this close": "This is less of a problem than we would have had if we shad a nationwide recount. At least we know the problem is isolated in Florida" (11/10).

CNN's Greenfield, predicting a possible mess: "You could have a situation where, once Florida decides who it thinks has won, on January 5, 2001, the new Congress convenes in joint session to certify the electoral vote. If one senator and one congressman object, the House is then adjourned to their prospective houses and decides. ... It takes both houses to reject electoral votes. So, presumably, the Republican House would approve of them. But think of the legitimacy issue. A new president Bush, coming into office, probably having lost the popular vote, with one of the two houses of Congress saying, 'We don't think you actually won.' We are a long way down that road. Unfortunately we're a heck of a lot closer to it than we were when the votes started being counted on Tuesday" ("IP," CNN, 11/9).

If There Is No President On Jan. 20?

The 12th Amendment "calls for the Senate to choose a VP for the purpose of "ascending to the Oval Office in the event a president can't be chosen by Inauguration Day. But those guidelines were drawn when the presidency legally changed hands on March 14 -- a condition that was not fully contemplated when the 20th Amendment moved the day of presidential transfer to Jan. 20" (Macero, Boston Herald, 11/10).

Flunk The College?

There have been more proposals "for constitutional amendments to change the Electoral College than any other subject -- more than 700 have been introduced in Congress over the past 200 years," according to the Nat'l Archives (Ft. Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel, 11/9).

Sen. Phil Gramm (R-TX) "warned" 11/9 against abandoning the Electoral College: "If you eliminated the Electoral College, presidential candidates would never campaign outside the 20 large metropolitan areas. The whole objective of the Electoral College was to ensure that a president campaigned all over America." Gramm said he believed the Electoral College system "will survive this latest turmoil" (Houston Chronicle, 11/10).

Preventing Faithless Electors

On 11/8, FEC officials "said even they are not sure whether oaths or state laws binding presidential electors are constitutional" (Ft. Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel, 11/9).

KS' six electors will receive their ballots in Sec/State Ron Thornburgh's office at noon Dec. 18. Said Sec/State spokesperson Kirsten Funk on whether the vote is a secret ballot: "It's not in a booth, but they don't sign it. So it's kind of private -- but not necessarily" (Grenz, Topeka Capital-Journal, 11/10).

The Akron Beacon Journal interviewed 13 of the 21 GOP electors about their vote. The electors have been fully identified above. Hamilton on electors switching: "I'd be worried about any defection. ... It's not going to be me. I don't need that kind of fame." Chiappetta: "I'm not going to break the law." Chester: "I never say never (but) I have not thought of any reason why I would not." Riel on outside pressures: "I don't have any concerns. I'm kind of my own person." Rajagopol: "I'm committed to work for Bush." Burstion-Donbraye on not voting for Bush: "The thought never entered my mind." Reynolds: "I think until this has been certified by the Secretary of State, it would be inappropriate to comment." Hennessey on voting for Bush: "I am very excited to have the opportunity. Frankly, it is a great honor to be able to do it." Harter on the scene 12/18: "I foresee that there will be picketers, protesters -- everything -- when we go to cast our vote." Miller on defectors: "As far as I'm concerned, it's ridiculous" (11/10).

The AP interviewed MN's Dem Electors about the chances of them switching their votes. Full I.D.s of these folks are listed above. Cameron: "Never in a million years." Ruzich: "Absolutely not." Bartels: "No way." Kalisch: "You don't think for a minute I'd vote for Bush, do you?" Little vowed to vote for Gore "regardless of how much pressure would be applied to me, but I doubt that would even happen" (Minneapolis Star Tribune, 11/10).

Sen. Robert Torricelli (D-NJ) on the idea of lobbying for faithless electors: "I am adamnatly opposed to that -- the idea of beginning a separate campaign to change the minds of electors. It is a precendet that will destroy our system of national presidential elections if the national political campaign is followed by a separate campaign to change the minds of electors into voting for somebody else." Lawrence Longley and Neal Peirce in their new book "The Electoral College Primer," note that "the incentives for elector defection ... would be much greater in the case of a very close election." They note an elector might change his/her vote "to gain personal fame or draw attention to some favorite cause or issue" (Star Ledger, 11/10).

Instead Of Faithless Electors, No-Show Electors?!? Sequester Them!

One KS elector, Dodge City resident Gene Eastin, "said he recalled an election several years ago where one of the Kansas electors was delayed and arrived too late to cast his vote. In that race, the missing vote didn't matter. But this year, he said, it was conceivable that, say, a December snow storm could tie up two electors somewhere and prevent Bush from obtaining a majority" (Grenz, Topeka Capital-Journal, 11/10).

A sampling of how some states prevent faithless electors.

Florida: requires electors to sign an oath to vote as pledged (Sun-Sentinel, 11/9). (Back to Contents)

SCENARIOS II: What if they held an election and nobody won?

Hotline founder Doug Bailey is one of the country's foremost experts on one of its most arcane political processes - what happens when a presidential election ends up in the House. Arcane? Yes, but now also possible. Wanting Hotline readers to be prepared for anything, we asked him to give us a primer.

Hotline: How does a presidential election end up decided in the House of Representatives?

Bailey: Under the 12th Amendment to the constitution, if no candidate ends up with a majority of the votes in the Electoral College, the House is to decide which candidate will be President, and the Senate elects the Vice-president.

Hotline: But how could that happen this year? Once Florida is decided, either Bush or Gore will have at least 270 Electoral votes.

Bailey: Until the Electors vote, neither one of them has any Electoral votes. One way it could happen is faithless Electors. Only about half the states bind their Electors by law, and even in those states there really is no penalty for voting the other way. Let's say that, after all this, Bush wins Florida (where he is ahead), and Gore wins Oregon (where he is ahead), and all other states stay the way they have been since Tuesday night; then Bush should expect 271 electoral votes and Gore should expect 267. If two faithless Electors, who are supposed to vote for Bush but genuinely believe that the will of the people of Palm Beach County has been thwarted, end up voting for Gore (or Mickey Mouse or abstain), each candidate would be short of 270 and the election would head for the House. Of course it's unlikely, but has there been anything likely about anything this week?

Hotline: Has an election ever gone to the House under the 12th Amendment before?

Bailey: Yes. In that case the popular vote winner from Tennessee was denied the presidency when the House elected the son of the former President. Four years later, with the people believing that he had been robbed, the Tennessean won a big victory for the first of his two terms in the White House. All that began in 1824, when Andrew Jackson won the popular vote, but John Quincy Adams was elected President by the House.

Hotline: Well, if it goes to the Republican House, that means Bush gets it, right?

Bailey: Not so fast. Under the 12th Amendment, each State gets only one vote in the House, with an absolute majority of 26 votes needed to win.

Hotline: In the House just elected, 27 States will have majority GOP delegations, so Bush wins, right?

Bailey: Not so fast. The Constitution doesn't say the "new" House; it just says the House. It probably would be the new House, because the results of the Electoral College are delivered to the new Congress. But even that is determined by statute, which could be changed. If it were the old House, the one still in office today, neither party has majority control of more than 24 states.

Hotline: OK, but let's say it is the new House. So Bush wins, right?

Bailey: Not so fast. I don't think you can automatically assume that in the most emotional, important and memorable vote that any Member will ever make that all of them will simply follow their party. Wouldn't you think about voting the way the country voted -- or even more likely the way your state voted -- or even more likely still the way your own District voted?

Hotline: Give me an example.

Bailey: OK, here's a simple one. Mike Castle is the lone Congressman from Delaware. And he's a Republican. He would have as many votes in this process as the 52 Members from California. How do you think he will vote? Delaware voted solidly for Al Gore? Do you really believe that Mike Castle will ever be elected to anything again in Delaware if he were to vote for Bush? And, frankly I think the trauma of the moment will be so great that most Members of Congress will forget the politics of it and do what they think is right - follow their conscience - rather than automatically following their party.

Hotline: So each state delegation gets together and takes a vote as to how the state's vote will be cast.

Bailey: Well, you would think so, but in fact there are no rules even on that. The constitution doesn't say how each state's vote is determined. It just says each state gets one. A majority vote in the delegation makes sense, but that means States with split delegations would end up not voting. But one guy grabbing the mike first is another way. And I would imagine that in big state delegations you might find the vote that is cast challenged on the floor. It will be chaos - as if we needed any more.

Hotline: Well, how did they decide it in 1824.

Bailey: That history might give you a clue as to what to expect. No one got a majority in the Electoral College that year because there was a third candidate, House Speaker Henry Clay. They split the electoral votes. Adams won in the House because Clay cut a deal with him. Adams' first act as President was to appoint Clay Secretary of State. Some might see that as a noble act by Clay to step aside; others call it rank opportunism. Whatever it was, it seems certain that the process in the House will require deal-making unlike anything we have seen before - as well as threatened recalls from the folks back home, the most intense public citizen lobbying, and many political careers cut short.

Hotline: And do the same rules apply in the Senate?

Bailey: Not quite. The Senate would vote for Vice-President, one-Senator-one-vote, with a majority of 51 votes required.

Hotline: So a 50-50 Senate, voting on party lines, would let Vice President Gore break the tie and give it to Joe Lieberman.

Bailey: No. There is no tie-breaker. So in a 50-50 Senate, some one will have to break party ranks for there to be a winner. But even in the Senate, there will be a lot of pressure to vote the way your state voted, regardless of party. Can you imagine the anger in North Dakota if both its Democratic Senators voted for Joe Lieberman, even though Bush-Cheney carried the state with 61%.

Hotline: Is there no silver lining here?

Bailey: Sure. The fact that the House picks the President and the Senate the Vice-President actually permits a kind of compromise to restore some national unity. It makes a Bush/Lieberman or Gore/Cheney administration possible. And while that may seem inconceivable today, if the chaos reaches Capitol Hill, this kind of solution might seem a welcome and rational thought.

Hotline: How fast is this all supposed to happen?

Bailey: Obviously it will take time. It won't get to the House until the Electoral College fails to be able to act. And while it will be their first order of business, it may be a long time before the House can act. There is no required timetable Hotline: But what happens if January 20th comes and no choice has been made. Does President Clinton stay on?

Bailey: No. Come noon on January 20th, his term will end - as will the Vice-President's. Some think the vacancy would be filled by an interim president picked by Congress, perhaps simply following the law of succession, which would anoint the Speaker of the House.

Hotline: President Hastert?

Bailey: If he is the Speaker. But knowing that the Speaker might be elevated to the top job this way, the House could elect another Speaker for precisely that reason. And, just in case this scenario hasn't seemed bizarre enough for you, it is wise to remember that just as anyone might be chosen by Congress to be interim President, the House of Representatives may elect anyone Speaker - and I mean anyone. You do not have to be a Member of the House to be elected Speaker of the House.

Hotline: Why on earth do you know all this stuff?

Bailey: In 1968, 32 years ago, while in between presidential candidates, I had a Jeff Greenfield kind of idea and wrote a novel (a bad novel) about the Presidential Election of 1984, called "Will the Gentleman Yield?" In it a third party candidate kept either major party candidate from winning a majority in the Electoral College and sent it into the House. Unlike Greenfield, I never got mine published. As my wife said: "Too much math, not enough sex."

1 MEDIA: Tauzin Makes Last Ever TV Appearance

Rep. Billy Tauzin (R-03) said 11/9 that he "was launching an investigation" into the incorrect early predictions by the major TV networks which may have "discouraged some people from voting." Tauzin said that early reports of Gore winning FL "before the polls closed on the West Coast," may have "dampened" GOP turnout for Bush and other GOPers. Said Tauzin: "Did Republicans in California decide during those two hours that it wasn't worth going to the polls because the election had already been decided in the East?" Tauzin, chair of the House subcommittee on Telecommunications, Trade and Consumer Protection, sent his letter to "the heads of CNN, ABC, CBS, NBC, Fox News" and the AP "asking how they made their election-night predictions" (Walsh, New Orleans Times-Picayune, 11/10). Tauzin also said hearings "were planned, most likely next year." Continued Tauzin: "I don't intend to violate the law or the spirit of the First Amendment, ... The intent is to find out what went wrong in this system." The networks said that they already had been "looking into how the Florida projections went awry" (Anderson, AP, 11/10).

Ex-Sen. Bob Dole (R-KS), on the media's election night performance: "It wasn't so much the premature announcement on Florida. It was the delay in announcing Georgia, where Bush had a 15 point lead, West Virginia, North Carolina. It was almost like a conspiracy, like they were trying to get the word out west that Gore was winning and that even states like Georgia and Virginia were too close to call" ("O'Reilly Factor," FNC. 11/9).

No More VNS?

Partners in the Voter News Service consortium -- including the major networks -- "said they would review the operations" of the "vote-data service." The four major networks and CNN "held a conference call Wednesday to discuss their perceived problems with VNS, which had provided exit-poll data and vote tabulations" 11/7. Meanwhile, GOPers are planning on placing "radio ads in the Florida Panhandle urging voters to call a toll-free number and join a lawsuit against VNS on grounds that its tabulations led the media to project" Gore the winner in FL "before polls had closed in the Panhandle." The panhandle is in a different time zone, leading to the polls there closing an hour later than the rest of the state (Chen, Wall Street Journal, 11/10).

Deserved Hostility?

A new poll of 1,005 adult residents of the US conducted by Scripps Howard News Service and Ohio University show that supporters of Gore and Bush believe the "press is hostile" to their candidate. 69% of Bush supporters say their "daily newspaper 'tends to favor'" Gore. 64% of Gore supporters say that their newspaper is "biased in favor of Bush." The survey found that "the more strongly voters identify themselves as Democrats or Republicans the more likely they are to perceive bias in newspaper coverage of the presidential race" (Hargrove/Stempell III, Scripps Howard News Service, 11/10).

Feeding The Junkie's Habit

Tallahassee Democrat's Sevigny reports, "Web surfers from Brazil to Canada are aiming their browsers at newspaper and election office Web sites in Florida, clogging the networks, and in some cases, using email to vent their frustrations with the democratic process." Since the polls closed 11/7, "more than 5.2 million people have accessed" the FL Div. of Elec. Web site, "slowing the system until it was impossible for some to access it." In '96, "the presidential election brought only 500,000 hits." Meanwhile, FL newspaper sites also have been hit hard with large amounts of Web traffic. Mark Graney, who helps run the Miami Herald's Web site, "said the frenzy of Internet activity involving Florida" is similar to what happens "a few days before hurricanes hit the state." Graney: "It seems to be the same rate of increase as when a major storm rolls through" (11/10).
