

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

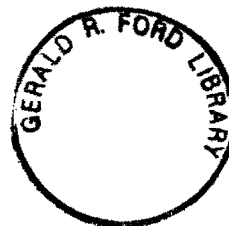

JULY 20, 1971

OFFICE OF THE WHITE HOUSE PRESS SECRETARY

THE WHITE HOUSE

PRESS CONFERENCE
OF
SENATOR HUGH SCOTT AND
CONGRESSMAN GERALD R. FORD
THE BRIEFING ROOM

(10:30 A.M. EDT)

MR. ZIEGLER: The Leadership meeting lasted this morning for about two hours. Congressman Ford and Senator Scott will give you a report.

CONGRESSMAN FORD: In addition to the periodic report by Senator Scott and myself on the legislative situation, Dr. Kissinger repeated basically the briefing he gave yesterday to the Republican Leadership as a whole on his trip to Mainland China.

In addition, we had a briefing from George Shultz, primarily on the status of the economy. It was pointed out that there has been a substantial increase in the GNP, over $30 billion in the first quarter, something in the neighborhood of $20 billion in the second quarter, and again in real values of about 6 percent during the six-month period.

We are encouraged in the field of the economy primarily because of the upsurge in retail sales, and in addition, housing starts, as reported yesterday, were substantially up, something in the magnitude of about 2 million units per year.

In the employment field, of course, you are all familiar with the drop from 6.1 or 6.2 to 5.6. In addition, there are also some very significant changes that ought to be mentioned.

The hours worked have gone up in the last six months from 39.6 to 40 hours. The lay-off rate has dropped. The adult male unemployment has dropped from 3.4 to 3.1. Overall, it appears that the economy is moving upward at a very encouraging rate, and all the forces are in action that I think will be encouraging to bear out what the President said earlier this year; that 1971 would be a good year, and 1972 would be a very good year.

SENATOR SCOTT: Mr. Shultz made the point that in the economy, the strength is gathering. The indicators generally are that way, and actual employment and longer hours of work are both moving strongly and favorably, and the changes are beginning to be noted in the labor market.

The drop in unemployment after seasonal adjustment has been real, and as to prices, the Consumer Price Index is up around 3 percent so far this year as against 6 percent last year. Therefore, the program for an increasingly strong economy and a gradual drop in unemployment is operating rather well.

MORE

Dr. Kissinger's briefing was substantially the same briefing as was given to the bipartisan leadership meeting yesterday.

Q Gentlemen, did you discuss the likely economic impact of the tentative settlement in the phone and postal industries?

SENATOR SCOTT: There was a general discussion on that, and it was indicated that it is not possible to assess the railroad strike situation adequately at this point; that in the postal adjustments there is expected to be an increase in productivity as well as an increase in the wage rates, which should largely compensate.

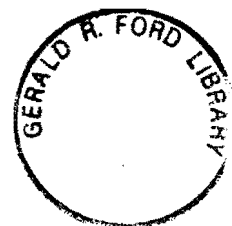

The difference in the balance of payments has been affected by the steel inventory purchasing, and by the effects of the West Coast strike, which has led to some purchasing above the ordinary from foreign countries, so those things were discussed.

Q Have you gentlemen displaced Secretary Connally as the President's economic spokesmen? (Laughter)

SENATOR SCOTT: I would not think of it. I am not an economist. I am merely a reporter in that respect. Most of the reporters are better economists than I am.

Q Why did Dr. Kissinger go through this briefing again today? Were there people in this meeting who were not in the one yesterday?

SENATOR SCOTT: Oh, yes. There were a number of people here. Yesterday it was Mr. Ford and myself and the Speaker, and then the ranking members and chairmen of the committees were there. Today we had the full Republican House and Senate leadership, so it was necessary to have a full briefing again.

Q What did he tell you that was different?

SENATOR SCOTT: I would not say that I heard anything that was different. We had a few more details as to the length of time spent with Premier Chou En-lai. There was somewhat more supporting information generally as to how he came to go over there, and the feeling that he had in dealing with Premier Chou, who he feels is a brilliant man with a sense of humor, a very strong personality, and remarkably well informed on the United States, as I think you already heard, but I may be the only Member of Congress who has actually seen Chou En-lai, as I did in a visit in 1956 when I happened to be in India, but that is my impression about him, too.

Q What did you gentlemen report to the President about the prospects for legislation, particularly prior to the August recess?

SENATOR SCOTT: Well, I handed the President a summation of what is pending before the Senate: the DOT, HUD and space appropriation bills, campaign spending, Lockheed; all of those this week, and the HEW problem next week.

I did not go beyond that. But you know it is expected that both Houses will have been able to act on all but three of the appropriations bills before the recess.

CONGRESSMAN FORD: We had a House report on the overall legislative progress. According to our figures, the President has submitted approximately 54 legislative proposals to the Congress since January. There has been very, very limited progress overall in consideration of and approval of this legislative package.

There is, of course, the hold-up in the Selective Service Act, which we hope will break loose in the near future. The House has passed the welfare reform legislation. We have passed, I think, six of the appropriation bills, and we hope that most of those will be done by the August recess.

As you look at the overall picture, legislatively speaking, the Congress as a whole has not, as of today, completed a respectable portion of the President's legislative recommendations. I hope that between now and August 6th there will be accelerated action, and if there is not by then, certainly we have a responsibility to move at a faster rate right after the recess.

SENATOR SCOTT: Two other points were made: First, that the President hasn't gotten action from Congress on his railway labor legislative recommendations; and that on revenue sharing, the passage of the President's revenue sharing bills, front-end loaded as they are, would bring more immediate relief to the economy than almost any form of tax reform.

Q Was there any discussion in the meeting this morning about the 7-point peace plan proposed in Paris by the North Vietnamese?

SENATOR SCOTT: No, there was not. I was tempted to bring up that it is always called a 7-point peace plan, and only two points seem to be discussed, but there was not time.

Q From either of your briefings with Dr. Kissinger, can you report anything about the U.S. policy with regard to Red China in the United Nations?

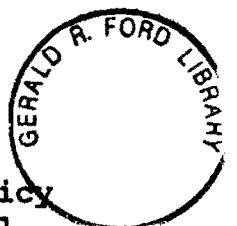

CONGRESSMAN FORD: I believe there will be a policy statement by the Secretary of State within the next several weeks on that particular point. Until then, I think it is premature for any one of us to comment on it.

Q Could we ask you your own opinions as to whether the United States should --

CONGRESSMAN FORD: I would rather not speculate at this point, or even give a personal view until we have had a better opportunity to go into the matter in depth and to see the ramifications that might develop as a result of recent events.

Q Did you want to comment on that, Senator Scott?

SENATOR SCOTT: My reaction is pretty much the same. I resisted two very insistent lady reporters yesterday, so with that experience, it is a little easier to resist you.

Q Was there any discussion of the Republican convention site?

CONGRESSMAN FORD: There was not. I think we are all waiting with anticipation as to just where that event will take place. I don't know where it is going to be and we did not discuss it.

SENATOR SCOTT: I was stationed at Del Coronado during the war. (Laughter)

Q Did anyone raise any reservations about the President's forthcoming trip, or concern about the future of the Taiwan government?

SENATOR SCOTT: No, I don't think any reservations were raised. There was general comment and pleasure that this opening has been made to the East, and there was certainly no criticism or reservation about it.

As regards Nationalist China, a question was raised as to what would happen there, and we were told, as Congressman Ford has told you, that the Secretary of State will shortly have a statement on Nationalist China.

CONGRESSMAN FORD: It was reiterated that the President's forthcoming trip will have no impact on our relations with old friends, as he said the other night; nor will it have any impact on our relations with any single nation.

The point was very forcefully made that the purpose of this forthcoming meeting is to discuss differences that obviously exist, and to aim in the broadest context for whatever can be accomplished in the area of world peace over the next decade. This point was very forcefully made, and I think very persuasively made: that this is the prime aim and objective of the prospective trip.

SENATOR SCOTT: The President used the phrase that power has been thrust upon the United States, not at our seeking, and we do not seek exploitation or expansionism, but that the forthcoming visit to China offers an excellent opportunity to discuss our mutual problems and to improve the chances for peace.

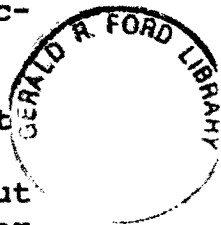

Q How can the President say, or you say, that this trip will have no impact on our relations with old friends when it has a very obviously fundamental impact on our relationships with both the Nationalist Chinese and the Soviet Union?

CONGRESSMAN FORD: I believe on those two points we should let the President's words of the other night stand. I think he believes it, I believe it, and I think it is an accurate statement.

Q Mr. Ford, do the countries involved believe it?

CONGRESSMAN FORD: I would not speculate on that at this point.

Q I think they have told us. It is not a matter of speculation.

SENATOR SCOTT: I think it is a question of impact. Almost anything you have done has impact. The use of the phrase so far as I used it was meant to imply that nothing unfriendly or hostile was intended toward another nation. You cannot talk to any nation without expecting other nations to be concerned, and some feel it has an effect on them. We do not understand that the President plans to do more than talk with China about mutual problems. Those discussions involved large areas of the world, of course.

Q Was there any discussion of the Mansfield amendment, and could you give us your assessment of what is going to happen to that now, in light of the China trip?

SENATOR SCOTT: I cannot give you an estimate as to what is going to happen. There was no discussion here today about it.

Yesterday there was some joking reference to it in the bipartisan meeting. I am not sure whether suitable language is being worked out or not. I know there is a search for language that would satisfy the conferees of both Houses. So far that has been an active search.

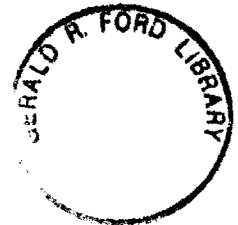

Q Did the Middle East come up?

SENATOR SCOTT: It was not mentioned.

THE PRESS: Thank you.
