3:02 p.m.
Exhibition of Traditional and Modern Japanese Athletics begins.

Judo: Performance includes some of Japan's star performers among the 20 participants. An Olympic sport, it is treated as more than that in Japan. Developed by Professor Kano in 1882, it was designed to combine the best aspects of physical education, self-defense, and athletics in a study of throws and holds.

Kendo: Of the 20 participants, some will be international award-winning stars. Kendo, or Japanese fencing, began in the 18th century as a means for the military to practice swordsmanship. In the late 19th century it became widespread in all educational institutions as a vehicle for moral development of the nation's youth. In a match, two contestants face each other in padded armor with swords made of split bamboo.
Tokyo, Japan

Wednesday - November 20, 1974

Naginata (Halbred). The naginata is one of the oldest weapons in Japan. Its principle of circular movement enables the user to keep someone at bay with a minimum of energy. The naginata has, historically, been one of the primary weapons for Japanese women of the military class and, today, is a popular form of physical education for girls. It is considered a splendid method of teaching respect for traditional etiquette and spiritual growth.

Gymnastics. Japan's top medalists perform on the steel bar, flying rings, parallel bars, uneven parallel bars (female) and floor exercises.

Volleyball. Japan's world champion team provides an exhibition match.

NOTE: Guest attendance includes Japanese of many of the nation's sports federations, as well as residents of the American community. After all exhibitions are completed, the participants proceed toward the President en masse and express their appreciation in manners consistent with the occasion.

Exhibition concludes.
