Helsinki Medal - Finland

Urho Kekkonen, president of Finland and host of the 1975 Helsinki Accords, gave this solid brass medallion to President Ford during his time in Finland in 1975. Thirty-five states came together on August 1, 1975 to sign the Helsinki Accords, the first act of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. This major step on the road to ending the Cold War called for compromise between the Soviet and Western blocs. The Soviet Union gained recognition of their new national boundaries; however, they had to accept clauses calling for the protection of basic human rights, especially in their Eastern European countries. Four inches in diameter, this small medal depicts on its front side Finlandia Hall, the building where the historical meeting took place. The back features a raised geometric pattern. Text etched onto the sides of the medallion reads, "Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe," the group of countries that organized the Helsinki Accords. This group eventually became today's Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the world's largest security-focused intergovernmental organization. The medal sits in a wooden box lined with brown velvet. A gold plaque on the lid also displays the name of the conference and "Helsinki 1975." A small envelope accompanies the item. Addressed on the front to "S. Exc. M. Gerald Ford," it contains a note with President Kekkonen's name and his title written in French.

It remains a mystery if President Kekkonen gave this gift exclusively to President Ford, or if every signatory to the Helsinki Accords received the same one. However, it represents a successful moment in President Ford's foreign policy in the easing of tensions with the Soviet Union amidst the Cold War.
