THE VALUE OF NAMING

In Frederick Buechner's novel Love Feast Leo Bebb the evangelist collides head-on with Virgil Roebuck who struggles to keep Bebb's church from meeting. One day the preacher has had his fill and parades into Roebuck's office ready for war.

He recalls for his friend Antonio - "I busted in there mad as a hornet, but you can't stay mad when you start thinking things. Once you commence noticing the lines a man's got round his eyes and mouth and think about the hopeful way his folks gave a special name to him when he was first born into the world, you might as well give up. I said to him, 'Virgil, the night is dark and we are far from home'. How come it was the words of that old hymn popped into my mind just then to say? I don't know, but it did. I said, 'The night is dark, Virgil Roebuck, and home's a long way off for both of us'.

Holy Baptism is also about the uniqueness of each of us. The naming is a personalizing ritual that reflects the valuing we can sense in relationship to Lord and each other.

Theodore Wedel writes about "the scandal of particularity" that is demonstrated in the personhood of Jesus and acknowledged by the church in the naming of each of us. In a time of computers and code numbers it may well be that the church has the responsibility of preserving this gift of naming and knowing.

Knowing names - being called by them - has some miraculous effects. There is a binding that grows out of confessing our individuality. It may be that a recognition of personhood is what allows us to admit to each other that "the night is dark and home's a long way off for both of us.
