SUBJECT: Judge Robert J. Kroninger

In response to your request for information regarding Judge Kroninger, I can point out the following:

- (1) He is a 52-year old judge on the Superior Court of Alameda County, California, appointed to that post by former Governor Brown in 1963.
- (2) Prior to his appointment to the Superior Court, Judge Kroninger served on the Alameda Municipal Court for a period of four years, appointed by Governor Brown in 1959.
- (3) Judge Kroninger is a graduate of the University of California and Boalt Hall Law School. Early in his career he served as a law clerk to the late California State Supreme Court Chief Justice Philip Gibson.
- (4) He is the author of several legal publications including: California Appellate Practice (part of the California Bar Association's continuing education series); Reorganization of the California Trial Courts; and a book entitled "Sara and the Senator", which is an account of a 19th Century duel between a Senator and a U. S. Supreme Court Judge (published in 1964 by Berkeley House).
- (5) Judge Kroninger is considered to be rather conservative. He received some publicity as the judge who heard the Berkeley "riot" cases during the 1960's, coming down on the side of the school in most instances.

Two Professors Lose Court Cases Involving Issues of Free Speech

In separate decisions published recently two courts ruled this summer against professors who were seeking reinstatement on grounds that their rights of free speech were violated. In one case, an associate professor sued Indiana University in Pennsylvania when it did not renew her teaching contract. In the other case, an assistant professor at the University of California at Berkeley sued when his name was removed from the tenure list.

In the Pennsylvania case, the Federal appeals court in Philadelphia upheld a Federal District Court decision that the associate professor's right to freedom of speech does not encompass essentially private expressions that have a potentially disruptive impact on the functioning of her department.

During the course of a faculty meeting, the teacher made personal attacks on the integrity of the department chairman. There also was evidence that her work performance was inadequate and that she failed to get along amicably with her colleagues. When the university failed to renew her contract she filed suit contending that her First and Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated. In ruling in favor of the university the appellate court distinguished the case from those in which the U.S. Supreme Court found a First Amendment violation. In the other cases, the court said, teachers were punished for making public statements or other public communications on issues of public interest. In the current case, the court said, the teacher's statements did not come within the protection of the First Amendment.

In the California case, a superior-court judge ruled against an assistant professor of criminology whose name was removed from the tenure list after he was arrested twice on the same day during a confrontation at Berkeley's People's Park. Judge Robert J. Kroninger held that the assistant professor had failed to prove that he was denied tenure for exercising his rights to free speech. Judge Kroninger commented further:

"No freedom is absolute and even that which is 'free' has its price. We are free to criticize a friend's social manners, but we cannot be guaranteed continued friendship. A worker is free to tell his employer what he thinks of his business judgments but he should not count on a Christmas bonus.

"So also a nontenured contract professor in the University of California's Department of Criminology is free to demonstrate, express political beliefs and involve himself in controversial proposals for the restructuring of the local police department; but he should not be surprised if such matters are weighed in considering him for tenure.

"One has the almost absolute right to say what he pleases; but he does not have the right to require that everyone be pleased with what he says. . . .

"A contract teacher of astronomy is free to argue that the moon is pistachio ice cream, but if he is not offered tenure, is it because he exercised free speech or because his utterances raise doubts about his qualifications?

"The Constitutional right to talk nonsense does not include protection against being thought a fool. . . ."

Laird, Mel

March 5, 1975

MEMORANDUM FOR: BILL WALKER
SUBJECT: Meeting with Hobart Lewis of Reader's Digest on Status of Mel Laird

Mr. Lewis made a special trip from New York to meet with me at 4 PM on March 4. He does not want to give the impression that he is being non-cooperative when he expresses reservations about allowing Mel Laird to accept an appointment by the President to PFIAB and that appears to be the reason he went out of his way to state his case in person. He takes the position that Mel is important to Reader's Digest in connection with its problems in certain foreign countries which are increasingly resentful of the presence and operations of the magazine and related enterprises in their territories. The problems arise from governmental efforts to curb or prohibit direct mail solicitation by the Reader's Digest for its various products and in some countries even the opportunity to publish and distribute the magazine is being threatened. Mr. Lewis feels that if Mel Laird were to have an official United States Government position he might be less effective in certain instances when trying to represent the private interests of Reader's Digest in its dealings with foreign governments. Contributing to this effect could be the impression created in foreign countries about our intelligence activities as a result of the current congressional investigations which impression could reflect on Mel Laird if he were made Chairman of the Board involved with foreign intelligence operations by the United States.

A secondary concern is that Mel Laird might feel inhibited about writing for the Reader's Digest on matters within his expertise as former Secretary of Defense if he were made privy to classified information furnished the PFIAB.

Hobart Lewis indicated that he would not object to granting Mel Laird a leave of absence for a year if he were really needed in the Administration, although obviously appointment to a part-time position would hardly justify his taking a leave of absence.

The matter was left that I should talk to Mel Laird on his return next week from South Africa, but Hobart Lewis did say that Mel Laird shared the concerns which Lewis had expressed to me.

I shall appreciate any suggestions you have about pursuing this matter further in a visit with Mel Laird.

Marc*

November 4, 1975

MEMORANDUM FOR: DOUGLAS BENNETT

FROM: PHILIP BUCHEN P.

As you know, I became acquainted with Marc Leland at the time he was being considered for appointment to be Deputy Counsel to the President.

My impression of Marc is that we should try to find a position for him within the Administration, because I believe he would be a valuable asset. He is at the point in his career when he has severed his connections with his law firm in San Francisco and is debating whether to take a position overseas with one of several firms in which he is interested.

However, his preference is to have a position with the government under this Republican Administration.

Prior to Marc's becoming interested in the Deputy Counsel's position, he talked to Larry Eagleburger at the State Department about a possible Ambassadorial appointment and was encouraged to express an interest in appointment to such a position either in Norway or Czechoslovakia.

I believe Marc is extremely qualified to fill the post of Ambassador in either of these countries, although I believe Norway would be his preference. Marc has had the advantage of leading a multinational existence and is thoroughly familiar with the European countries.

He also has the advantage of the extra means which make service as a U. S. Ambassador easier to accomplish despite the limited salary and allowances afforded to our ambassadors by the U. S. Government.

I would very much appreciate your giving thought to this subject and advising me how we could advance Marc's name for further consideration to fill the position discussed. I think Larry Eagleburger is eager to move on this matter if he gets encouragement from here.

Dear Phil:

I understand that Martin Lipton is under consideration for the position of Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I have been working with Mr. Lipton on a highly complicated securities matter on a daily basis for about two weeks. In fact, he recently spent several full days in Grand Rapids working with various members of our firm.

I am sure that you are much more familiar with Mr. Lipton's past experience and qualifications in the securities area than I am. I have, however, had the opportunity of spending many hours with him and there can be no doubt, from a practical point of view, that he is highly knowledgeable in the area of the federal securities laws.

In addition, and also of significance to the position for which Mr. Lipton is being considered, is the fact that he has a warm, friendly personality. His quiet demeanor, coupled with his obvious professional ability, instills confidence in those that are relying on him. For example, he presided at a ten-man board of directors meeting today and many people commented after the meeting that they felt extremely fortunate to have him as their legal advisor.

Mr. Lipton has not asked that I recommend him but I did want to call these matters to your attention, realizing that you may be somehow involved in the appointment. In short, Mr. Lipton has my highest recommendation. I believe that he would serve well as Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and would prove to be a credit to the country.

Sincerely,

Dear Phil:

It has come to my attention that the appointment of the Librarian of Congress will soon be made and that Mr. John G. Lorenz, who is at present Acting Librarian, is a candidate for the position. It is in his behalf that I am writing.

I have known Mr. Lorenz over a period of years and believe that he would fill the office effectively and with distinction. He was the extremely competent Chief of the Reference Division of the Grand Rapids Public Library. He later became Assistant State Librarian of the Michigan State Library at Lansing, where he served for eleven years. He then became Director of the Division of Library Services and Educational Facilities of the United States Office of Education, and was Deputy Librarian of Congress until recently, when he was made Acting Librarian.

Mr. Lorenz has won the admiration of many of the country's librarians. Among them, I especially mention Dr. Frederick H. Wagman, Director of the University of Michigan Library at Ann Arbor. He is well supported by the Library of Congress staff, including an enthusiastic group of black employees of the Library. I wish to make the additional point that it is essential that the head of the Library of Congress be a professional librarian.

With the experience of my twenty years of work with libraries, I can say that, in my opinion, Mr. Lorenz would be an admirable selection for Librarian of the Library of Congress.

Tom joins me in warmest wishes to you and Bunny.

Very sincerely yours,

Dorothy

I have the honor to enclose the nomination of Milton L. Luger, of New York, to be Assistant Administrator, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, to fill a new position created under Public Law 93-415.
