EXCERPT

Jimmy Carter's Speech in Columbus, Ohio Airport. Sept. 9, 1976

. . . Second, our leaders must be willing to adopt and implement the stern measures needed to bring the bureaucracy in line. In the following weeks I will be discussing a number of specific individual issues relating to government reform. One such measure called "Sunset" legislation required that an agency will die on a date certain after its birth unless Congress and the President affirmatively act to recreate it.

I have followed with considerable interest the work of Sen. Muskie and the Senate Government Operations Committee and Ohio's own Senator John Glenn on Sunset legislation. The current bill, the government of Economy Spending Reform Act of 1976 stipulates that all tax expenditures and authorizations for most Federal programs would terminate every five years unless specifically reenacted by Congress. Programs that were part of the same functional area would expire at the same time to make the Congressional review more systematic.

The Republican Administration despite campaign rhetoric while controlling government waste has testified against enactment of Sunset legislation before both Houses of Congress. Its spokesmen asserted that legislation is not necessary and the Executive Branch can reform itself. But as Senator Muskie has emphasized, we have had 18 years of rhetoric about programs reviewed by the Executive Branch with no action. A strong prod is needed from the outside. Up to the present time I have not taken a position on this issue. Today I have decided to do so. Halfway measures are not enough. The instinct for (bureaucratic) the political inertia which keeps all agencies afloat is too strong to be overcome except by drastic procedures.

If elected I will actively support a strong Sunset law covering most of the bureaucratic establishment, in covering virtually all tax expenditures as well. I want a law that will shut down outdated agencies and programs once and for all. I intend to secure enactment of such a law. I believe this legislation from the Congress would complement the zero based budget which will be immediately implemented in the Executive Branch if I am elected.

The American people should know that despite campaign talk about efficiency, this Republican Administration has (so) actively opposed Sunset legislation. Some parts of the Federal Government do require constant continuity and permanence. Sunset legislation generally should not and does not affect legislation securing fundamental human or economic rights or civil rights laws or contributory programs such as pensions, social security, unemployment compensation or minimum wage.

The specific provisions and timetable of the Sunset bill must be worked out by Congress so that it would be compatible with the other duties Congress must discharge. But after a century of new agencies, new programs and new spending, it is time to ask the most basic question. Do our programs work? How can we make them work better? Which ones do we need? Like other significant innovations, Sunset legislation will present some practical problems but I am confident that the benefits of systematic review will outweigh the inconveniences.
