PRESIDENT'S
COMMISSION ON WHITE HOUSE FELLOWSHIPS
THE WHITE HOUSE

July 28, 1976

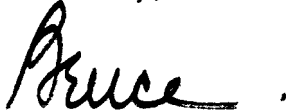

Dear Ron:

Many thanks for arranging for the 1975-76 White House Fellows to attend this morning's press briefing. All of us found it a fascinating experience and we all enjoyed having an opportunity to see the members of the press interact with each other, as well as with you as Press Secretary.

We also very much appreciate the time you took from what we know is a busy schedule to meet with us to discuss some of your areas of responsibility, the functions and organization of the Office of Communications, and your perspectives on the members of the press in general.

Thank you again for a most educational session.

Sincerely,

Bruce H. Hasenkamp

2. The White House Fellowship program was established on October 3, 1964 by the late President Johnson. This is the eleventh class of White House Fellows, who were selected from 2,307 applicants. They began their Fellowship year in Washington on September 1, 1975, and will conclude their year as Fellows on August 31, 1976.
3. The purpose of the White House Fellowship program is to provide gifted and highly motivated young Americans with some firsthand experience in the process of governing the nation and a sense of personal involvement in the leadership of the society.

Each Fellow is assigned to the Vice President, a member of the Cabinet, the head of an independent Executive Branch agency, or to a member of the President's staff, such as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. In addition to their educational assignment, the Fellows participate as a class in an intensive seminar program which supplements their assignments and broadens their exposure. The seminar program consists of off-the-record discussions with prominent representatives from both the public and private sectors and are usually held two or three times a week.

4. You will recall we distributed an announcement of the seventeen newly-selected Fellows on March 24. They will arrive in Washington on September 1 to start their Fellowship year.
5. Director Bruce H. Hasenkamp is here. After the press briefing he will be glad to answer any questions pertaining to the program.

PRESIDENT'S
THE WHITE HOUSE

September 8, 1975

Dear Ron:

The fourteen members of the 1975-76 class of White House Fellows, who began their assignments here on the second of September, were chosen from among 2,307 applicants to serve as special assistants to members of the Cabinet and the President's principal staff. In addition to these full-time responsibilities, the Fellows, as you know, pursue an intensive education program designed to provide them with an enlarged awareness of the operations and policy problems of government and to expose them to a wide range of current issues and points of view.

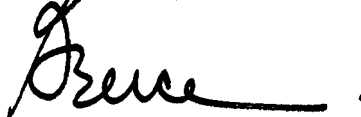

As a significant part of their education program, we would be delighted if you could meet with them sometime during the month of October to discuss the operations and policies of the White House Press Office and your responsibilities as Press Secretary to the President.

All meetings with the Fellows are off-the-record to encourage the fullest sort of discussion. Usually they would ask you to make some initial comments and then open the meeting for questions and a free exchange of ideas and views. A luncheon or dinner meeting hosted by the Fellows is often, we find, most convenient, but a session at another hour can also be arranged.

For your information, I am enclosing our brochure, highlighting the Fellows' biographies, and a list of their job assignments, as well as a copy of my biography.

I hope it will be possible for you to meet with the 1975-76 White House Fellows, and will look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

Bruce H. Hasenkamp

BRUCE H. HASENKAMP
Director
President's Commission on
White House Fellowships

Bruce Hasenkamp was born in Brooklyn, New York, on May 12, 1938, and grew up in Hillsdale, New Jersey.

As a high school senior, he was selected as the outstanding high school journalist in that state. Mr. Hasenkamp continued his interest in journalism at Dartmouth College, where he was executive editor of the daily newspaper; he was also active in undergraduate student government and served as president of his fraternity. He received his A. B. degree, cum laude and with distinction in history, in 1960. He then studied law at Stanford, where he received his J. D. degree in 1963. During law school summers he worked on the Washington staff of Congressman William B. Widnall.

A member of the Bars of California and New York, Mr. Hasenkamp was associated with the New York law firm of Simpson Thacher & Bartlett from 1963-68. As an Army first lieutenant, he served two years as a company commander, battalion adjutant, and legal officer in Korea.

In 1968 Mr. Hasenkamp was named Assistant Dean of the Stanford Law School. During the next five years he successively administered student affairs, design of the new $9 million Stanford legal center, and alumni and development efforts. In the latter capacity he oversaw a 250% growth in funding for the Law School and a 600% increase in annual gifts.

Immediately prior to his September 3, 1974, appointment by President Ford as Director of the White House Fellowships program, Mr. Hasenkamp was in private practice as a consultant in educational management.

In the San Francisco Bay Area, Mr. Hasenkamp served as director or officer of the Constitutional Rights Foundation, the Suicide Prevention Center, the Boy Scouts of America, and other organizations. He is a member of Rotary International, the Commonwealth Club of California, and the World Affairs Council.

While a lawyer in New York, he was a member of the Stanford Law School Board of Visitors and founded the Stanford Law Society. He presently serves on the National Board of Directors of the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, and is a former member of the Conference of Delegates of the State Bar of California. He and his wife, Inta, have traveled extensively in Asia, Western and Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, and Canada. They reside in Arlington, Virginia.

Statement of Purpose

The purpose of the White House Fellowship program is to provide gifted and highly motivated young Americans with some firsthand experience in the process of governing the Nation and a sense of personal involvement in the leadership of the society.

The program seeks to draw exceptionally promising young people from all sectors of our national life—the professions, business, government, the arts, and the academic world. It is essential to the healthy functioning of our system that we have in the nongovernmental sector a generous supply of leaders who have an understanding—gained at firsthand—of the problems of national government. In a day when the individual feels increasingly remote from the centers of power and decision-making, such leaders can help their fellow citizens comprehend the process by which the Nation is governed.

In this country today, we produce great numbers of skilled professionals; but too few of this intellectual elite provide the society with statesmanlike leadership and guidance in public affairs. If the sparsely settled American colonies of the late 18th Century could produce Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Monroe, Madison, Hamilton, Franklin, and others of superlative talent, breadth, and statesmanship, should we not be able to produce, in this generation, ten times that number? We are not doing so.

Surely the raw material is still there; and just as surely more must be done in the development of our ablest young people to inspire and facilitate the emergence of such leaders and statesmen. Their horizons and experience must be broadened to give them a sense of personal involvement in the leadership of the society, a vision of greatness for the society, and a sense of responsibility for bringing that greatness to reality.

The White House Fellowship program is designed to give superbly qualified young Americans precisely those experiences.

—Adopted by the President's Commission on White House Fellowships, 1965

v

President Ford introduces 1975-76 White House Fellows to the national press in the Rose Garden. Standing with the President is Commission Chairman Miles W. Kirkpatrick and, at left, Commission Director Bruce H. Hasenkamp.

The President chats with 1974-75 Fellow Roger B. Porter, who worked on economic policy at the White House.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger talks with Adam W. Herbert, Jr., his 1974-75 White House Fellow, after his morning staff meeting.

The Program in Action

A White House Fellowship consists of an individual work assignment supplemented by participation in a wide-ranging, broadening education program.

Assignment

Each White House Fellow is assigned—typically as a Special Assistant—to the Vice President, a member of the Cabinet, the head of an independent Executive Branch agency, or to a principal member of the President's staff, such as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

This work assignment is the heart of the White House Fellowship program, for it enables the Fellow to come away with a sense of active participation in the governmental process and actual contribution to the business of government.

The actual nature of one's assignment varies with the particular talents and interests of the Fellow, and depends greatly on what needs to be done. Fellows may respond to specific assignments, or they may initiate projects. Naturally, the role of an individual depends in some degree on the personal relationship he or she forms with a specific Cabinet-level officer.

In most cases, by the end of the year, the typical Fellow will have written speeches, attended conferences, supervised staff work, reviewed or helped draft proposed legislation, answered congressional inquiries, chaired meetings, drafted reports, conducted briefings, and spearheaded one or more projects. Some Fellows will have dealt with the whole range of policy matters faced by their respective officials, while others will have become deeply involved in just a few select issues. Throughout the year emphasis is placed on linking theory and practice, analysis and action.

Though they operate on a high level, the work done by the Fellows is not always glamorous. Sometimes it is frustrating, and there are times when it becomes routine. But the spirit of the program has always been one of public service—if there is a job to be done, the White House Fellows will try to do it.

The following are illustrative of the wide variety of activities in which the 1974-75 White House Fellows were involved:

—While working as Special Assistant to the Secretary of Defense, the Fellow undertook evaluation of the support systems for the Defense Security Assistance Agency. The project was subsequently expanded into a comprehensive review of the structure and management of foreign military sales operations.

—The Fellow who worked for the Federal Energy Administrator managed policy development and review for the Energy Resources Council and assisted the Administrator with his work on the Economic Policy Board and with a broad range of agency management and legislative affairs matters.

—Another Fellow, who spent his year as Special Assistant to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, conducted studies for the Secretary on management, including department organization. He prepared option papers on such program issues as urban homesteading and subsidy funding of public housing authorities. In addition, he participated in the President's Economic Conferences, assisted a new Secretary during the transition period, and, through personal visits to Indian reservations, helped plan the National Indian Housing Conference; he subsequently provided ideas and coordinating action to improve the production of housing for native Americans.

Although it is difficult to generalize about the assignments given to White House Fellows, one can say that the tasks demand flexibility, a willingness to work hard, and the capacity to learn quickly. Usually these are the very qualities that made the Fellows promising leaders who were already recognized in their own private careers.

White House Fellows should not expect to continue what they had been doing before entering the program. Frequently the Fellow with an education background finds himself or herself working on a public health project; the engineer spends a major part of the year setting up a job-training program; and the architect does more writing than designing. Rather than fit the Fellows to their pre-Fellowship specialities, the program aims to tap their resources and to develop their abilities in their broadest sense. Since White House Fellows constantly meet new challenges and experiences, they must be flexible and readily adaptable individuals.

Education Program

A distinguishing feature of the Fellowship experience is the education program, in which the Fellows participate as a class.

The education program supplements the learning process inherent in the Fellows' assignments and broadens their exposure. It consists of a series of seminar meetings, usually held two or three times a week throughout the Fellowship year. These off-the-record discussions with prominent representatives from both the public and private sectors are complemented with occasional travel to experience, observe, and examine at firsthand major issues confronting our society.

In 1974-75 these discussions included meetings with current and former Cabinet Secretaries and senior White House staff members, Senators and Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss responds to a Fellow's question about campaign finance reform.

Congressmen, Justices of the Supreme Court, the Secretary General of the United Nations, Ambassadors, major media figures like Walter Cronkite and the editorial leadership of The New York Times and The Washington Post, labor leaders such as George Meany, the chief executive officers of major corporations, leading scholars, and the heads of citizen, professional, and industrial organizations, and of the Democratic and Republican Parties. A list of many of these individuals appears on page 13.

During the past ten years Fellows have walked the streets in big city ghettos; talked with members of the White Mountain Apache Tribe while visiting their reservation to study their economic development program; met with leaders of New York's financial community; flown along the oil pipeline route in Alaska, stopping at construction camps to talk with workers; scrambled through coal mines studying our energy resources; and visited the classrooms of an Eskimo community high above the Arctic Circle.

In addition to this domestic focus, Fellows have occasionally examined international affairs and U.S. foreign policy, and developed understanding for the philosophies and points of view of other governments, through overseas travel.

The education program and portions of the selection process are supported by private funds. Since 1964, support has come from such sources as the Carnegie Corporation, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, the Richardson Foundation, and the Cincinnati Enquirer Foundation. Additional contributions have come from David Rockefeller, U. S. Steel, General Foods, International Business Machines, Olin, North American Rockwell, General Electric, Cargill, the Henry J. Kaiser Foundation, Continental Oil Company, Westinghouse Corporation, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Industries Foundation, Burlington Industries, the Jesse Philips Foundation, and numerous individuals who share a common commitment to the worth of the program's objectives and an appreciation for its success during its first decade.

In conjunction with the Nation's Bicentennial, the spirit of which the program so clearly exemplifies, the White House Fellows Association, of which all former and current Fellows are members, through its Foundation, is raising a permanent fund to endow the education program and selection process. The Association's objective is to guarantee in perpetuity the program's quality, independence, and nonpartisan nature.

Program Results

What has been the impact of this unique experience of serving as a White House Fellow on those who have participated?

Perhaps the most distinguishing mark of former Fellows is increased service to their country. In some cases this has been manifested by their pursuit of a career in public service; more likely it has led former Fellows to return to government for an additional period in appointive or elective office. Former Fellows are now Secretary to the Cabinet, Appointments Secretary to the President, Assistant Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Congressman from Colorado's Second District, and the Director of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. Others have served on school and museum boards, governors' task forces and commissions, as Attorney General of Alaska, and as Deputy Speaker of the New Hampshire House of Representatives.

President Ford listens to a policy suggestion during a luncheon meeting with 1974-75 Fellows in the Executive Office Building cafeteria.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur F. Burns explains an aspect of monetary policy at breakfast with the 1974-75 White House Fellows.

Former Fellows have also consistently distinguished themselves in their private sector careers. Within the group can be found the second woman Vice President in I.B.M.'s history, the Dean of Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service, the Publisher of The Dallas Times Herald, the President of the National Commercial Credit Corporation, and the President of the Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center, to name just a few.

Since its inception in 1964, the White House Fellowship program has had 182 participants. Among the group have been sociologists, city planners, medical doctors, college professors, a policeman, engineers, attorneys, and others. They have come from 41 states and the District of Columbia, and from various political, economic, and educational backgrounds. They shared in common a personal commitment to excellence, exceptional ability and achievement demonstrated early in their careers, strong leadership qualities, and devotion to the quality of life in America.

Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz confers with his 1974-75 White House Fellow, Garrey E. Carruthers.

The late President Lyndon B. Johnson, who created the Fellowship program in 1964, visits with three White House Fellows in the Oval Office.

General Information

History

Believing that "a genuinely free society cannot be a spectator society," the late President Lyndon B. Johnson announced the establishment of the White House Fellowship program in the East Room of the White House on October 3, 1964.

Prompted by a suggestion from former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare John W. Gardner, then President of the Carnegie Corporation, the program sought to draw bright, young people to Washington, without the impetus of crisis, for a close look at the process of government.

Each year since 1964, a group of not more than 19 exceptionally promising young citizens, drawn from all sectors of national life, have been chosen to serve as White House Fellows. For one year they are assigned as Special Assistants to the Vice President, Cabinet officers, principal members of the President's staff, or other officials in the Executive Branch of the Federal Government. In addition to their daily tasks, they participate in educational activities revolving around all parts of governmental life and all aspects of leadership in the private sector. In this way they learn, at firsthand, the major issues faced by their government and the challenges of finding and implementing solutions.

The White House Fellowship program has achieved results far beyond those originally expected. At the time it was developed 11 years ago, it was generally thought that those who would be selected as Fellows from around the country would have an opportunity to broaden their perspectives. Presidents, including President Ford, and Cabinet Secretaries since that time have found that the presence of the White House Fellows in the departments has broadened their perspectives as well.

Eligibility

Under the terms of President Johnson's Executive Order establishing the program, applications will be accepted from persons of all occupations who will have attained the age of 23 but not the age of 36 by September 1, 1976. Applicants must be citizens of the United States. No employees of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government are eligible for the program, with the exception of career military personnel of the Armed Services. Applications will be accepted from candidates overseas, provided they can return to the United States for regional interviews at their own expense.

Requests for applications for the 1976-77 Fellowship year must be postmarked not later than November 10, 1975.

Remuneration

White House Fellows receive a government salary of up to $31,806 for the year. The precise salary of a Fellow is set commensurate with previous education, experience, and earnings. Adjustments for cost of living differences are not, however, taken into consideration.

Selection Process

The selection process is nonpartisan and designed to identify young men and women who give promise of providing the kind of leadership that will influence the shape of our society for many years to come. Fellows will normally have completed their educations and begun their careers, and each will have demonstrated exceptional ability, marked leadership qualities, unusual promise of future development, high moral character, and tangible expression of concern about the problems facing our society and the quality of life in America.

The Commission on White House Fellowships is appointed by the President to monitor the selection of Fellows and the implementation of the program. Chairmen of the Commission since its establishment in 1964 have been David Rockefeller, Chairman of the Board of the Chase Manhattan Bank; C. Douglas Dillon, Chairman of the U.S. and Foreign Securities Corporation and former Secretary of the Treasury; William H. Hastie, Senior Circuit Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals; Arthur S. Flemming, Commissioner on Aging and Chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission; Charles B. Thornton, Chairman of the Board of Litton Industries, Inc.; Francis L. Dale, U.S. Ambassador to International Organizations and former president and publisher of the Cincinnati Enquirer; and presently Miles W. Kirkpatrick, partner in the law firm of Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, and former Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

The steps in the selection process are:

1. Announcement—The White House announces commencement of the application period in late summer.
2. Application—Candidates must complete applications and submit them directly to the President's Commission on White House Fellowships, Washington, D.C. 20415. Only official application forms will be accepted.
3. Initial Screening—All applications and supporting papers are first reviewed under supervision of the Commission Office by members of a panel of judges in Washington, D.C. Primary consideration is given to such factors as professional achievement; intellectual ability; evidence of leadership; special talents; and demonstrated interest in the affairs of the community, state, and Nation. Applicants selected in this initial screening are designated as Regional Semifinalists. Their application files are forwarded to one of the Commission's Regional Selection Panels located in 11 geographic regions in the United States.

4. Regional Screening—Members of the Regional Panels review the application files forwarded to them and select those to be interviewed personally by the panel. These candidates are then designated as Regional Finalists.
5. Regional Interviews and Recommendations—Following its interviews of the Regional Finalists, each panel submits its comments on each Regional Finalist to the Commission on White House Fellowships, and recommends those it feels should be interviewed by the Commission.
6. Final Selection Meeting—The Commission on White House Fellowships, after receiving the advice of the Regional Panels, designates approximately 30 candidates as National Finalists and invites them to Washington, D.C., for a final selection meeting with the Commission. After additional interviews and reviews of all pertinent information, the Commission makes its recommendations to the President, who then appoints the new group of White House Fellows.

1974-75 Fellows share an informal moment with AFL-CIO President George Meany before their luncheon meeting with him.

7. Interview Period and Placement—New White House Fellows are interviewed by various agencies within the Executive Branch shortly after their selection. Announcement of job assignments is made by the Commission Office prior to September 1, when the Fellowship year begins.

The 1974-75 White House Fellows enjoy a humorous moment during their meeting with Treasury Secretary William E. Simon.

The 1975-76 White House Fellows

Dennis C. Blair, 28, Lieutenant Commander, United States Navy, Systems Analysis Division, staff of the Chief of Naval Operations, Washington, D.C. Born in Kittery, Maine, he received a B.S. degree from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1968 graduating first in his class academically. As a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University, he completed an M.A. degree in Russian Language and Literature and Modern European History. From 1971 to 1973 he served on a guided missile destroyer in the Atlantic Fleet, deploying to the Mediterranean and Northern Europe. During his assignment on the Staff of the Chief of Naval Operations, he worked in the areas of long-range planning and comparative military strategies of the Soviet Union and the United States.

Marshall N. Carter, 35, Major, United States Marine Corps and an operations analyst at Headquarters Marine Corps, Washington, D.C. Born in Newport News, Virginia, he graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1962. He served in infantry leadership positions prior to going to Vietnam in 1966 where he was awarded the Nation's second highest award, the Navy Cross, for extraordinary heroism on the battlefield as the commanding officer of an infantry company. After receiving an M.S. degree in operations research from the Naval Postgraduate School in 1970, he returned to Vietnam as an advisor to the Vietnamese Marines. He has authored numerous professional articles, served on the Editorial Board of the Marine Corps Gazette, appeared in the Outstanding Young Men of America, and recently completed course work for an M.A. degree in Science Technology and Public Policy at George Washington University. Prior to his assignment in Washington he performed operations analyses on research, development, test and evaluation projects for the Marine Corps at Quantico, Virginia. In addition to the Navy Cross, Major Carter has been awarded the Bronze Star, Navy Commendation Medal, Navy Achievement Medal, Purple Heart, and three awards from the Government of South Vietnam.

Wesley K. Clark, 30, Major in the United States Army. Born in Chicago, Illinois, he received a B.S. degree in 1966 from the United States Military Academy, graduating first in his class. From 1966-68 he attended Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar completing an M.A. degree in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics. He commanded a combat infantry company in Vietnam and served as a plans officer for the 1st Infantry Division there. In 1971 he helped plan the Army's transition to the All-Volunteer Force and later served as a consultant to the Army Staff on the defense implications of the energy crisis. From 1971 to 1974 Major Clark served as an Assistant Professor in the Department of Social Sciences at West Point, where he directed a major study of the development of responsibility among cadets. He completed studies at the Army's Command and General Staff College in 1975. He is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and has published several articles on national security affairs. His military awards include the Silver Star, Bronze Star, Commendation Medal, and Purple Heart.

James P. Connelly, 28, attorney with the law firm of Foley & Lardner, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Born in Hartford, Wisconsin, he received a B.A. degree in History and Political Science from Marquette University in 1969, and a J.D. degree from Georgetown University Law Center in 1972. While in law school, Mr. Connelly served as Editor-in-Chief of the Georgetown Law Journal and as an officer of several student organizations. Mr. Connelly is co-founder and a board member of Epi-Hab Milwaukee, Inc., a corporation created exclusively to train and employ epileptics, and of Great Lakes Hemophilia Foundation, Inc., an entity which has devised and implemented an "in-the-home" therapy program for the care and treatment of hemophiliacs. He is the President of Masitran Corporation, which is involved in mass transportation problems, and is an officer and director of two other business corporations. Mr. Connelly presently serves as legal counsel to two environmentally concerned community groups, and is an active participant in a number of other civic and professional activities.

Patricia A. Davis, 30, management consultant for Booz, Allen & Hamilton, San Francisco, California. Born in Washington, D.C., she received a B.S. degree with a major in mathematics and statistics from Howard University in 1966 where she graduated cum laude. Mrs. Davis was awarded a Council of Graduate Management Education fellowship, and in 1973 received an M.B.A. degree from the Stanford Graduate School of Business. She was elected Academic Chairman and was recently appointed a member of the Board of Directors of the Stanford Business School Alumni Association. Mrs. Davis has participated as a guest speaker at regional seminars for the Association for the Integration of Management, New York. In addition, Mrs. Davis has worked extensively as a volunteer with youth in Washington, D.C.

Randall W. Hardy, 30, Lieutenant Commander, United States Navy, is Assistant NATO Plans Officer for the Chief of Naval Operations. Born in Lake City, Florida, he received a B.S. degree from the United States Naval Academy in 1966. He earned an M.P.A. degree with a specialty in Sino-Japanese relations from the University of Washington in 1972, receiving personal commendation from the Dean of the Graduate School of Public Affairs. He served as Missile Officer aboard a guided missile frigate, as Weapons and Operations Officer aboard a destroyer, as Commanding Officer of a patrol gunboat, as Commander of a three-ship patrol squadron, and, most recently, as the Navy's Assistant Middle East Plans Officer. His professional honors include the Meritorious Unit Commendation (two awards), the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry, and the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal. Commander Hardy is a member of the International Visitors Service Council and Common Cause and has worked extensively as a volunteer in senior citizen programs.

Arthur H. House, 33, economist on the policy planning staff of the World Bank in Washington, D.C. Born in Manchester, Connecticut, he received a B.A. degree in political science from Tufts College in 1964, and subsequently received a Ph.D. degree in international relations from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University. Dr. House was Assistant Dean of the Fletcher School, then a Research Associate in Political Development. He spent a semester as a visiting faculty member at the National University of Zaire in Kinshasa, Zaire. Joining the World Bank as a member of the Young Professional Program, he worked as an economist and program officer, and traveled extensively in Asia and Africa prior to his assignment on the policy planning staff. He has written articles for several newspapers and journals, was guest editor of a newspaper in Connecticut, and worked as a commentator for public television in Boston.

Martin C. Jischke, 33, Associate Professor of Aerospace, Mechanical, and Nuclear Engineering, University of Oklahoma. Born in Chicago, Illinois, he received a B.S. degree with honors from the Illinois Institute of Technology in 1963, and S.M. and Ph.D. degrees in Aeronautics and Astronautics from M.I.T. in 1964 and 1968, respectively. Dr. Jischke is currently Chairman of the General Faculty and the Faculty Senate at the University of Oklahoma and has served as chapter President of the American Association of University Professors. He also serves as a member of the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education study group to plan Oklahoma higher education for 1975-85. Dr. Jischke is the author of over 30 publications in the areas of engineering education, fluid dynamics, geophysics, and energy, and has been the principal investigator of several sponsored research projects. He serves as an aviation consultant and is a contributing author to World Book Encyclopedia. Dr. Jischke is listed in Who's Who in Oklahoma, American Men and Women of Science, Who's Who in the South and Southwest, and Outstanding Educators of America.

Thomas J. Kline, 30, Pfizer Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Washington, D.C. Born in White Plains, New York, he received a B.S. degree from the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga in 1967, where he was President of the Student Government Association and was recipient of the Alumni Achievement Award. Mr. Kline received a research assistantship to the University of Missouri where he participated in biomedical research and obtained an M.S. degree in Industrial Engineering. During 1969 he served as a Lieutenant with the United States Army Corps of Engineers in Vietnam. His military awards include the Bronze Star, three Army Commendation Medals and the Vietnamese Civil Works Medal. Mr. Kline is active in community affairs and, as a member of the New York City Jaycees, helped found a Jaycee extension chapter at the Riker's Island Prison. He joined Pfizer Pharmaceuticals in 1970 and, in 1972, was assigned to their manufacturing complex located in Barceloneta, Puerto Rico, where he was instrumental in implementing a Pfizer community action program to provide health and welfare services to the Barceloneta community.

John M. Oblak, 34, Senior Research Associate, Materials Engineering and Research Laboratory, Pratt and Whitney Aircraft, Middletown, Connecticut. Born in Akron, Ohio, he received a B.S. degree in 1962, an M.S. in 1964, and a Ph.D. in 1966 from Case Institute of Technology. In 1974, Dr. Oblak received an M.B.A. degree from the University of Connecticut's Hartford Program where he was recipient of the Wall Street Journal Achievement Award. He is the author or co-author of over forty technical publications and holds two patents on gas turbine materials. In 1970, he was recipient of the Henry Marion Howe Medal of the American Society for Metals, and, in 1971, the New England Regional Conference Award of the Metallurgical Society of AIME. He participates in committee activities in these two professional societies and serves on the Metallurgical Transactions Board of Review. He is listed in American Men and Women of Science.

Dean L. Overman, 31, partner in the Chicago law firm of D'Ancona, Pflaum, Wyatt, & Riskind. Born in Chicago, Illinois, he received an A.B. degree from Hope College and a J.D. degree from Boalt Hall School of Law, University of California. He served as a poverty lawyer in Chicago under a Reginald Heber Smith Fellowship, started a street academy for high school dropouts in Bedford-Stuyvesant, New York, and has participated in many activities on behalf of poverty organizations in New York, California and Illinois. He authored chapters in four law books and law review articles on securities, corporate, tax, commercial and banking law. He has lectured to attorneys as a faculty member of the Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education, and has served as the Editor of the Illinois Bar's Commercial, Banking and Bankruptcy Newsletter. Mr. Overman has also served as a member of the Chicago Bar's Uniform Commercial Code Committee and was an organizer and a member of the Advisory Council of the Chicago Postal Street Academy. He appears in Outstanding Young Men of America.

David H. Roe, 34, Major in the United States Air Force and a Research Assistant to the Department of Defense Committee on Excellence in Education. Born in Denver, Colorado, he was a distinguished graduate of the United States Air Force Academy in 1962 where he was the Cadet Wing Commander. He attended Oxford University on a Rhodes Scholarship and later was awarded the Commandant's Trophy as the outstanding graduate from the Air Force's Squadron Officer School. He received M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Illinois. Major Roe has served at the Air Force Flight Test Center as a Bioastronautics Project Officer on test aircraft and as officer-in-charge of the Pararescue Team for XB-70 and X-15 operations. He was an Associate Professor of Life Sciences on the faculty of the Air Force Academy. He is listed in Outstanding Young Men of America and is a member of Sigma Xi and a past President of the Association of Graduates of the U.S. Air Force Academy.
